CUTTING TABLE CLIPPINGS

The tailor shop is pleased to report that the suits for the boys in the graduating class are ready for delivery. This undertaking was easier this year than last owing to the better ability of the young apprentices.

As the cutting of a large part of the work was done by student apprentices, and all the garment making, it argues well for the future of these promising young men.

The tailor shop regrets that it is not represented in the graduating class this year, but hopes to furnish a full quota next year in the persons of Alex Cajete and Leon Reinkin, and the tailor shop makes no mistakes when it declares that they cannot fail in their efforts in civil life. Their preparations now is and will be such as knows no failure.

This season of Commencement carries us back to just one year ago when the tailor shop was represented in the graduating class by Philip Sorahan, and who a few days after school closed obtained a position with Geo. W. Johnson, of Salem, to take charge of the tailoring interests of that prominent clothing and furnishing house. Today this young ex-student of Chemawa is still in the same position and his employer is very well satisfied with his efforts.

We point with pride to what should be the record of every boy who is entitled to partake of the splendid industrial training to be had at the Chemawa Indian Training School.
