

ment taken, diminishing or enlarging the size of the pattern, whichever is needed. We learn to place the patterns in a way to save the goods, not forgetting the grain, the matching of stripes and plaids, and, in woolen cloth, to cut with the nap running downward.

In connection with the use of patterns we begin the drafting of patterns as you see one of our class now doing. We use the Vienna system provided by the Department; this system being adapted to the drafting of patterns for any sized child as well as for the adult. Having learned to cut and make a plain dress neatly, we take up ruffling, tucking, tailoring, pressing; the last is a most important part of dressmaking.

We are now advanced to what we call the dressmaking class proper, where we cut and make our best uniform dresses. The dresses which you see us, the girls of the graduating class, wearing during these exercises, having been cut and made by ourselves, are fair samples of the sewing room training we receive at Chemawa. Not all of us can become dressmakers in the highest sense of the word, but no girl who has any aptitude for sewing, need leave Chemawa not knowing how to cut and make her own clothes.

Brevities

Joe Pablo returned to Chemawa Tuesday from Montana.

The Rose Avenue and Sunset Leagues have closed for the season.

A number of visitors were on the grounds on Wednesday afternoon.

A number of the pupils have been leaving for their homes this week.

Last Monday evening the graduates had a party among themselves. The first part of the evening was enjoyably spent in playing games, such as Black Man, Bull in the Ring, Drop the Handkerchief, etc., in front of the Academic Building, and not until nine o'clock did they think of leaving their games to repair to McBride Hall, where refreshments were served. When the warning wink of the lights reminded them that it was bed time a speech was asked of each of the class of '08. This ended their happy evening and all went home in high spirits.
