

KEEP NATIVES OUT OF SIGHT.

James L. Farmer, of Nashville, Tenn. appointed by the government to collaborate with Gov. Hoggatt, of Alaska, in collecting an Alaska exhibit for the Alaska-Pacific exposition, reached Seattle last night on his way to Juneau. Mr. Farmer has in mind an Alaska exhibit which, he thinks, will truly represent the country as it is today.

"We will leave the Eskimos and Indians at home," said he last night at the Rainier-Grand. "What we want to show is that Alaska is a country where white men can live and our exhibit will be collected with this idea in mind. The resources of the country will be as well represented as possible and we expect to demonstrate that Alaska is not only a country of gold but a country where the necessary cereals and garden products can be raised."—Seattle Post Intelligencer.

Their country is to be exploited, not the natives, but we expect to see the worst side of these people depicted in the side shows of the Yukon Exposition for the delectation of a morbid public.

 LOCALS

Miss Irene Howard was the guest of her sister, Miss Frances, Sunday evening.

Mr. and Mrs. Cox served a delicious luncheon to the large boys on Tuesday.

Miss Iva Cox left Wednesday evening to visit friends in California. Chemawa friends were loath to have Miss Cox take her departure, as she is very popular with the younger set.

The office girls all agree that Miss

Edna Koester certainly knows how to make penochee, judging from the toothsome contents of the box sent Miss Hutchinson from Yreka, Calif.

Mr. and Mrs. Cox leave soon for their new field of work at the Leupp School in sunshiny Arizona. Their many friends will miss them at Chemawa, but the best wishes of the American and friends go with them.

The baseball season is over. Now comes basketball and football. The prospects for a good football schedule this fall are very bright, while with the new gymnasium, Chemawa will have a basketball floor not excelled in the Northwest and equalled by but one or two.

Miss Hutchinson was the recipient of a box of beautiful specimens of Southern California products—olives on branch, figs, oranges, lemons, and a branch of a pepperwood tree, from Mrs. Hay, who is now taking a course in the San Bernardino College. Mrs. Hay likes the south very well, although she states she misses the delightful climate of Oregon and many friends at Chemawa.

The birthday of Mr. M. W. Cooper was fittingly commemorated Monday evening, August 17th, when some people gathered to honor the occasion. Games were played until a late hour, but "The Business Game" and funny speeches and toasts afforded much amusement during the evening. Delicate refreshments were served by the popular young hostess, Miss Bertha Cooper, and her assistants, and the guests took their departure wishing that birthdays might be more frequent at the Cooper home. Among those present were Misses Frances Howard, Caroline Koester, Cora E. Steponeck, Iva Cox, Messrs Henry Dillstrom, Clarence Cooper, Mrs. A. Cooper.
