

INDUSTRIAL NOTES

BY PUPILS

The laundry detail has changed.

The detail has changed in the dining room.

Eugene Williams has entered the paint shop.

The dining hall is always kept in a neat condition.

Eugene Williams is painting the cornice of the power house.

Several new wagons are in the paint shop ready for painting.

The engineer boys repaired the wringer in the laundry last week.

Martin Cooper and Harvey Ashue have entered the harness shop.

The painters have completed painting the interior of Supt. Chalcraft's cottage.

Joaquin Meadows, Orin French and Wm. Major are ironing off new wagons.

The wood saw is kept busy these cold days, supplying the different cottages with wood.

The painters are painting the power house and the little buildings of the open air sanitarium.

Anthony Morell is working on the industrial detail. He is a good worker, always attending to his work.

Joaquin Meadows welded new stubbs on the axles of one of the old hacks which makes it as good as new.

Rhoda Silverthorn and Hazel Picard were the best workers in the laundry last week on the morning detail.

Leon Reinkin and Alden Clark are working on the farm. They do a great deal of driving and understand a great deal about horses.

Haines Bateman has plenty of repair work to do in the shoe shop. He patched a puncture in the girls' basketball, doing excellent work.

Edward McClellan and Simon Mathews are putting new boxes in the wheels of the old hacks that comes into the blacksmith shop for repairs.

The new boiler is in its place in the power house. The smokestack is finished. As soon as the fire box is made and pipes connected it will be ready for use.

CUTTING TABLE CLIPPINGS.

We are pleased to report the completion of the football knicker-bockers recently ordered made by the office, and it became an open question in the Tailor Shop as to the amount of peg-top necessary to insure the proper pear-shaped effect. For the Tailor Shop is desirous of being correct in a sartorial sense in all its productions. After listening to the opinions of the various authorities on peg-top effects it was finally decided, and the result proved very satisfactory to every one interested. Chester Mecum, Harry Joe, Ben Bearchild, Alex Covington and Patsy Barrett are the coming "knights of the Shears" who voiced the opinions that decided the question.

Harry Joe is very busy at present cutting trousers and it is very satisfactory to notice the manner in which he handles this difficult class of work.

Louis Towner is now making trousers and the Tailor Shop predicts that he will develop into a very capable and careful mechanic and become a useful and helpful apprentice in the near future.

We are pleased to say that at the present time the Tailor Shop is better supplied than ever before with a very desirable lot of apprentices for which we feel thankful.--TAILOR SHOP.
