Mr. Swartz arrived home the first of the week from his annual leave of absence.

The plumbers are kept warm now days by thawing out the water pipes. Don't let the steam pipes freeze.

If the girls were allowed to march out of the dining hall when the boys do the snow would soon be gone around the dining hall.

Albert Samuels and Chas. Walton from Alaska made a sled and take turns drawing each other around the walks. They miss the dogs very much.

Some of the 40-degree-below-zero Alaskans here seem to cuddle around the radiators and shiver as much as the native sons from the orange groves.

The wood shed crew are kept from their hiding places these cold days by the "we-want-wood" howls that come from the freezing occupants of the different cottages.

Silas Moon, who spent the holidays with Chemawa friends, departed Tuesday for Tacoma, where he has a position in one of the carshops of a railroad company. Ernest Brewer expected to go to Tacoma at the same time, but business reasons detained him here.

The basketball men should get down to work now, as the season is well under way at other places. We have nearly all of last year's players, an excellent gymnasium, and lots of time for practice. There is no reason why we should not develop a winning team in a short time. Better team work and greater speed will come with a little practice every evening from the material we have to select from.

The snow storm has brought into use a great collection of coats, furs, scarfs, shawls, mufflers, capes, muffs, collarettes, gloves, mittens, rubbers, and ear protectors too numerous to mention. Several blankets have been missed from different rooms. The losers can find them by lifting some of the small boys out of their big shoes, or by removing the big boots and shoes from the farmers, dairy-men and gardeners. The young ladies have loaned out several scarfs and shawls which are now keeping the ears of several young men from freezing.
