

LIVE ITEMS.

Our Doctor is in seclusion this week. Green felt hats for men are in vogue.

The small girls recently had a treat of candy and peanuts.

Over a hundred new bedsteads arrived at the school this week.

Most everyone going to our Northern Metropolis comes back "citified."

Show your school interest by attending some of the public assemblies.

Friday is usually the barber's busiest day at Chemawa. Sociable.

The Doctor is a swell affair this week. He is in full bloom with poison oak.

Notice: It is only the lazy and thoughtless who throw paper on the ground.

It keeps the boys at the training table busy scheming how to get a Sunday pie.

A few boys forgot to be in "full uniform" at the Sunday afternoon roll call.

The plumbers had better have a bee cleaning up around the front door of their shop.

Several employes were in Portland this week looking over the "After Easter" sales.

Haynes DeWitt and Louis Pelletier are putting a double entrance door into the office.

Mr. Mudge and his detail made a turntable for the wood cart in the engine room this week.

Miss Leader would have joined a local lodge had the rate of assessment on her correct age been satisfactorily settled.

When a boy's hand is too sore to hold a hoe or any other tool, it certainly ought to be too sore to catch a flying ball.

Dollie Case plays the march so well that the pupils can readily get into step and keep in step while marching out of chapel.

The band concert on the bandstand and Michel Wilson's graphophone filled the atmosphere with a "pleasant air" Sunday afternoon.

The bakers are swinging Indian clubs a great deal in the shop, some of that valuable energy had better be turned toward the dough.

Before Warren Smith could go out to play on Sunday afternoon he was asked to write "papa;" he went into his room and wrote "Maum."

Mr. Smith has been making good use of the dairy boys during the middle part of the day. They fall nicely into all the odd and emergency jobs.

Some of the first team players who represented Chemawa at the first two games would better grace the grandstand than the diamond, if they are there only to see the game.

Last week the Doctor had a swell head from winning a wrestling bout, this week is has a swell face from a Sunday afternoon stroll into a poison oak district. Pride goeth before a fall.

The Doctor experienced a little difficulty in diagnosing his case. At first he thought it was the itch, but later it developed into poison oak. Here is a great distinction with but little difference.

Several boys forgot to take in their beddings from the porches and make their beds after Mr. Smith had announced the instruction on Monday. They assisted the wood haulers after supper as a gentle reminder. The saying is, "What you don't have in your head you will have to have in your heels."
