LOCALS

Mr. Teabo was in Salem, Wednesday, on business.

Joe Moss is the chief rat killer in the power house.

Mrs. Theisz went to Forest Grove, Tuesday, on school business.

Joe Wiggins went to Salem, Wednesday, after a load of cement.

Lilacs are now in bloom in front of Brewer and Mitchell Halls.

Invoices have been received for a handsome double-oven range for the Domestic Science Department.

Come out and see the ball game this evening. The Tigers and the Black Cats will cross bats.

Sam Wewa of Warm Spring is one of the new-comers who made the training table for the Salem-Portland relay race.

Mrs. McPherson (nee Bowman) who has spent the winter with her husband on Fox Island, Alaska, sends greetings to her Chemawa friends.

In another column of our paper you will notice the wrestling match is said to be tonight. It is now put off one week making it Thursday, the 29th.

Mr. Westley is kept pretty busy these days running from one place to another. Our garden is quite large this year and he has to see to all parts of it at once.

Mrs. Donald Campbell after a visit of three weeks at Chemawa has returned to her home in Spokane. She leaves here a host of friends, who will greatly miss her.

During working hours it does not look well to see the engineer apprentices sitting on the window sill of the front windows of the power house putting in their time loafing when they should be polishing up their engines or doing other necessary work about the power house.

The birds were not all killed during the cold snap last winter, as many predicted, for they are here once more, as numerous as ever. Chemawa's stately firs seem to be a favorable place for the song birds and each morning our ears are delighted with the melodies of the "feathered choristers", who warble fearlessly amid the leafy woods--without dread of the naughty boy's sling. Our boys at Chemawa protect the birds as was seen by their care of them last winter.

The printers are happy in the possession of their new Diamond Cylinder power press which has been installed and is now a part of the equipment of the printing office. This press will supply a much needed want of our printing department and will give our printing apprentices opportunities heretofore needed. Two of last year's printing apprentices are filling their vocation, Webster Hudson as editor and publisher of the Quilicute Independent, the only paper in the Northwest, and we believe the only other one of two in United States published and edited by an Indian, and Jack McCush, who has been working steadily at his trade in a newspaper office at Fortuna, Calif., since leaving Chemawa.
