Extract from the column of a country paper: "Will the person who took the thermometer from the front of this office, please return it, as it does not register high enough to be of any use where he is going."—Ex.

An old negro died and went to heaven, on his arrival he knocked at the golden gate. Peter answering, said, "Who comes here?" "George Washington Van Buren," he replied. "Have you always been a good Christian?" said Peter. "Kinder average," said the old man. "Did you ever steal watermelons?" said Peter. "No" he replied, "they never did somehow agree with me." "Did you ever steal chickens?" he still questioned. "No, sir," said the old man emphatically. "Sure?" said Peter. "Sure," he replied. "Well, I guess I'll let you in," said Peter. The man passed in, chuckling to himself, "That was a pretty close shave when he spoke of the chickens. If he had ever said ducks he'd a had me."
