ENGINEERS' PARTY.

Last Tuesday night the engineers, together with their invited friends and a number of employes, spent an enjoyable evening in the school auditorium. Promptly at seven o'clock the door was opened and prompt also were the invited guests to be there to partake of the pleasures and goodies that were to be had. The evening was opened with a greeting of welcome by Harry Jones. Martin Sampson and Manuel Swanson then sang a duet. The room was decorated with evergreens, which were tastefully arranged along the stage and around the entire room. Old Glory was seen on each of the four walls of the room, fluttering gently amid the shouts and laughter of the happy assembly; but this was not all, these decorations were illuminated by a string of electric lights which were stretched around the entire room, from which hung pennants of various colleges of the northwest.

The evening was devoted to games of various kinds until the hour arrived for the refreshments, then of course every body got things ready for the edibles which were to be served. Some of course were impatient, but one couldn't blame them for they were completely exhausted from running around playing drop the handkerchief and other games.

All eyes were turned stageward waiting for the waiters to make their rounds, but all of this time the waiters were busy as bees getting the plates arranged so that when they got started there would be no more waiting on the part of the invited friends. After waiting for about fifteen minutes, to their great joy the visitors saw a waiter come forth with the first load, then another came, then another, then every thing was in full force.

The refreshment consisted of oranges, cookies, sandwiches, pickles, cocoa, etc. After the refreshments were disposed of, the hour being very late, everybody got ready to retire. Thus ended another evening that will long be remembered.

A new supply of leather for the harness shop department has been received this week.

Mr Meier and his plumber boys fitted up a new lavatory room for Mrs. Doherty in the Brewer Hall.
