

THE REAL DISMAL SWAMP.

ruffled the dark waters of Lake Drummond, that silent pool in the heart of the unbroken forest, till they danced merrily. The days were one long delight and the nights so still and deep as only he who has been in the wilderness can understand, while a little moon rode up out of the cypresses and turned to silver the white mist on the water. The Dismal Swamp remains today, in spite of the loggers and the attempts at agricultural reclamation, much as it has been for a century. It has suffered in popular estimation from its association. Intrinsicly, it is the opposite of dismal; it is a virgin paradise.—Walter Pichard Eaton in Harper's.

BOYS, BE A HIGH-GRADER

George M. Pullman began his business career as a clerk in a store at a dollar a week. From that he went into business of moving buildings. While trying to sleep curled up on a seat in a day coach one night he conceived the possibilities of a sleeping car. From that one night's experience has grown the superb Pullman equipment in use throughout the country.

The Pullman Company is without competition. The public has come to demand the service and is willing to pay extra for it.

Are you mastering your school work and improving your time at your trade so that employers will be glad to pay you an excess wage? Are you preparing yourself to furnish the Pullman service—to do a grade of work that none will be able to excel? Don't be a day coach—give the work you do that touch of smartness that commands respect and superior pay. Make your standard the highest quality in the market. Employers demand the best. Prepare yourself and be ready to give them what they want.—FRYE.
