HALF-WAY DON'T PAY.

"Whatever is worth doing at all is worth doing well," is an old saying. It certainly is a truthful one. That piece of work which is but half done will receive but half price in the market. It was not well done and commands a price in keeping with its production.

Instead of doing a half way job it is wiser to expend just a little more time and execute a splendid bit of work. As a little more time on top of a half-way job with its half price will turn out a finished product at full price, it should be easy to see that the latter part of a job—the finished part—is the part which pays the best. Almost anybody can start a bit of work, but few there are who can properly finish it.

Think, too, of the pride one has, or should have, in the knowledge that he has turned out a fine piece of work. No matter if you are hired to work for others you are, nevertheless, working for yourself. If while employed by others you put your heart into your work you are daily improving yourself, in addition to the salary you receive. At all times cherish a desire to excel, to be considered a fine workman and to feel that you can live up to a reputation for the same. Feel that what you have selected for your life work and yourself are equally honorable—be a credit to each other, you and your work. With this sort of spirit there is always success—never failure.

INDUSTRIAL MEETING.

Pursuant to the schedule for 1910-11 Tuesday evening was given for a meeting of the industrial instructors, who met in the chapel with a very satisfactory representation. Previous to the order of business the gathering was entertained by Dr. Fulkreson, who delivered an address upon "Man" and his associates and some of the characteristics peculiar to his species. Our doctor's discourse was entertaining and pleasing as well as bewildering. His efforts were accorded much applause.

The chairman, Mr. M. W. Cooper, called the meeting to order and explained the aims and objects of these gatherings and after some discussion the meeting became very helpful and interesting, and no doubt will prove beneficial in the future.

Mr. Smith was unanimously elected secretary.

On the whole, this must become an important factor for good results in our school organization—ONE OF THEM.

MINUTES OF THE MEETING.

On Tuesday evening a meeting of the male industrial employes was held in the school chapel, Mr. W. M. Cooper presiding. First in order was to appoint a secretary, Mr. E. A. Smith being the unanimous choice. The object of the
