When the great men of the nation take an interest in a thing it goes without saying that importance attaches to that thing. When great men take to heart the welfare of a people it is a sure sign that something is expected of that people. No higher tribute could be paid our girls and boys than that of Colonel Roosevelt, when at Chemawa for a few minutes last Wednesday noon, he said, "Tell all of them that I am very glad to see them here and I wish them success."

By such an utterance he made it clear that he expects much of our boys and girls. They should feel honored by his interest in them and try to so live that they may merit his good wishes. No one knows better than Colonel Roosevelt that the boys and girls of today are to become the men and women of tomorrow. The future of the nation will in time be dependent upon those who are boys and girls today. Let us hope we shall make good by selecting as our models for good-living and right-doing the highest type of American citizenship—such a man as Theodore Roosevelt.
