THE SUCCESS HIGHWAY.

To insure a successful career it is necessary to figure on an expenditure of mental or manual energy. All the great things of the world are the result of energy—the real work of hand or brain.

He who would ride along the highway of success must be always up and doing. If he allows himself to be a laggard he loses the trail and wanders into the field of sloth, where his individuality may be lost. So it is clear that if we wish to travel the highways and byways of success we must display energy in some line.

The world has need of capable men and women, of honest men and women, of people who are energetic in every way—in their labors, in the enforcement of right principles, in adherence to clear truth. The world has a place for the person who shows the courage of his energy by facing the world fairly and looking it fearlessly in the face.

So live that you will be not afraid. Be energetic in your thoughts and actions then shall you succeed, for you will be traveling the bypaths of success.

It matters little how much talent or genius one may possess if it remains uncultivated. A person might possess the natural qualifications to become the greatest artist or artisan of his time, but without application and perseverance he and the world will lose the fruits of great talent. Try and discover if there is not something that you can do better than others—then keep on doing it.

FINE PARTY.

The decorations consisted of flags, bunting, crepe paper of society colors, and pennants of conquered societies, among which was their own pennant which has not as yet been taken since the vogue of pennant sacrificing as the result of a public debate decision. These were all very artistically arranged and presented a very beautiful scene.

Guests commenced to arrive at about eight o'clock and from then until eleven there was something doing. Floor and table games were played and the well-behaved party seemed to be enjoying itself.

The music for the evening was furnished by a phonograph and two violins. The refreshments were all good and consisted of sandwiches, cocoa, bananas, oranges, candy, nuts, ice cream and cake. These were furnished in style and were abundant. At the conclusion of the refreshments Mr. Fickle, critic of the champions, made a few closing remarks, after which all left for their quarters with a good night and loud congratulations and praise for the ability displayed at party entertaining, as well as at the debate.
