Although parcel post matter now constitutes 60 per cent of the entire weight of the mails an increase in rates may be put upon it to wipe out the 100 million annual deficit of the Post Office Department. If we may ouggest to the new Postmaster General a quick way to make up the shortage, it would be that he double the postal rate on the wagonload of Government was onto its job and it would relieve editors and janitors of handling so much waste-basket material. Unless something of this sort is done a bill in Congress for the Relief of Over-Junked Editors ma ysoon become necessary.
