Great Painter's Work Revealed by Accident

At Graz, Austria, Doctor Bienen-thal, government art expert, looking over an ast exhibition, stopped before a large canvas depicting the ascension of the Virgin Mary into heaven. Something led him to examine it closely, and he discovered that the canvas bore two coats of paint. The outside coat was removed and beneath it was revealed a genuine Tintoretto valued at $500,000. The government ordered the complete restoration of the canvas, 12 by 13 feet, which was the property of a church. The discovery is like many that have been made before. When invaders went into Italy many of the Italian masterpleces were painted over with ordinary pictures, and when the foreign armies had withdrawn they were restored. But sometimes the foreign art rob bers could not tell the difference between a daub and a masterplece, so the camouflaged art treasures were carried off. Many of them have been since discovered, but doubtless there are others still concealed by commonplace pictures .-- Pathfinger Mag azine,

Billy, the small son of a prominent doctor, was playing at his father's profession, walking up and down the street with a "pretend" medicine case in his hand and a very serious expression upon his face. Much impressed, next-door Lillian inquired of her mother:

Man's Will Mystifies

Why John Humphreys Plummer of Southport, England, should leave practically all of his estate of approximately $1,250,000 in trust for the endowment of chairs for modern scientific research at Cambridge university is mystifying his old friends. Plummer had been in the real estate business at Southport for more than fifty years. He was never at Cambridge university; never took particularly keen interest in educational matters, and had never been a scientist. His only other bequest was an annuity of $1,000 to his only surviving son-

Traced to Crusaders

The sword salute originated in the time of the Crusaders when the hilt of the sword was made in the form of a cross. Every Crusader kissed the cross as a seal of his purpose and faith and swore by the hilt of the sword, raising it to his lips for that purpose. Another custom passed down to the ages from the Crusaders, and one that has been a custom in all Christian navies since then, is that of placing an officer's cap and sword his coffin during burial services. The Crusader's shield and arms cov ered him in death.

Program for the Busy Girl

THERE are two little lines of worry in the rather pretty forehead of one Amella and they're growing deeper, day by day. She's a nice kid with a pretty good face on the whole and the two aforementioned lines aren't doing anything for her chances of an external schoolgiri complexion.

But she can't help them. She is in a state of rush, of nervous activity which produces the little frown, and produces with it a certain shortness of temper, and acidity of disposition which are not endearing.

She's actually a busy girl. She works, she has a certain amount to do with taking care of her own clothes -she goes out in the evenings quite a lot, she dances, plays bridge, writes letters to an ever-increasing circle of friends-in short she lives the full busy life of a normal girl.

But she has no pleasure in it. The needless tasks which are part of everyday life plie up in front of her into a big black shadow from which she cannot escape.

Her's is not an easy-going temperament. She does not meet each minute with a serene confidence. She worries in advance of a situation, worries all the way through it about something still further ahead-and wonders why she isn't getting enough out of life.

There's only one cure for the nerv ous fidgety type who have a certain amount of work to do every day which cannot be avoided-that is to form a program and to stick to it.

The girl who calmiy and efficiently does each day what must be done is never faced with gigantic problems all of a sudden. It's the nervous hurrled Amella type which is constantly having nervous breakdowns from overwork Amella rushes through one task. only to pause for a good hard worry over what she's going to do to the old black dress when she gets home. She sits puzzling over this problem and bewalling her lack of money until some precious time has speeded past and she's horrified to discover that she has not even completed the work before her, let alone solved the problem yet waiting for her.

That causes more worry and the work she thereupon proceeds to do is faulty and inaccurate because her mind is too crowded with doubt and worry to permit its working clearly. You see what I mean. That kind of frail little thing must have a program of some sort if she's to keep out of sanitariums the rest of her life. Otherwise she will spend her days in worrying over what she has to do -and the time will slip past and she will find at the end of the day she has twice as much to do.

Man Marries Grandmother

Marriage of a grandson and his grandmother has just been reported from a village near Swole, in the Province of Overljssel, Holland. This is how it happened: A man married a girl of twenty, whose mother was for-ty-five. By his first marriage this man had had a son and this son married the mother of his father's second wife. Relatives figure out that the youth not only married his stepmother, but became stepfather to his own father.

Solitude

In our modern day, with the pace that our civilization tries to establish and to maintain, a great many people are made nervous by peace" and solltude. Our speed of life is such that usually, when we seek repose, we make a mad dash for it. But solitude has a hand to still the pulse's leap, a voice to calm and reassure. Solitude is a room into which we can retire whenever we need a change from present company. It is a bourne of solace and reflection .- American Magazine.

soul so dead who has never mur inured to a bosom gossip, "Now for a really good low-down on our friends,' and therewith plunged into a nice catty discussion of acquaintances, intimate and distant?

There are very few gals in the world who won't own up, under pres sure, to a perfectly natural human desire, ever so often, to criticize what In their friends they find unpleasantand to do it thoroughly.

It doesn't seem- exactly a vicious practice-this little pastime of raking all one's neighbors over the coals, but honestly it's the most costly lux ury any little malden can afford. The girl who settles herself down comfortably to tell an interested audience exactly why Dorothy isn't as nice as she's supposed to be-is induiging herself-and at what an expense. For the sake of a few precious moments of tongue-wagging over a delectable piece of gossip-she's endangering her own good reputation and friendship with her hearers.

Oh, yes, she is! Not that they're all silently despising her for gossiping-as they eagerly listen and press for more details. Not that at all. But somewhere inside them they're making a mental note: "This girl Anne CAN be darned catty if she chooses, 1 wonder what she'd say about me if she got half a chance." Of course, that isn't a really consclous thought with them at all. But the impression sticks, all the same. and it breeds distrust of Anne.

There aren't many high-minded young things in the crowd today who will actually refuse to listen to the low-down on somebody else. So that Anne will never receive open and violent rebuff for her story-telling proclivities. She will always be listened to with flattering interest.

But she will not be trusted as a loyal friend and confidante, no matter how well her gossip is received.

Even the Dumbest Dora is bound to get wise to the fact that if Anne tells such interesting and dirty details about Dorothy, Anne will be able to furnish just the same amount of interesting data, on any girl to whom she takes a sudden dislike.

Therefore even the Dumbest Dora is careful not to give Anne food for conversation. She doesn't exactly avoid the little story teller, but she avoids being conspicuously friendly or unfriendly. ($) by the Bell Syndicate, Inc.)
