Take Out Power Insurance, Now!

It is usual, out in the west, to look upon our waterpower resources as "almost limitless." That is a dangerous state of mind for any city. In the east, New York already is taking steps to preserve every drop of water in the Great Lakes, for power production at Niagara Falls and on the St. Lawrence river. Older thickly settled parts of the east are hunting about for new power sites. The story of the east today is the story of the west tomorrow. If we let power sites get out of public hands into private ownership, we must pay toll in the future every time we turn on an electric lamp. The west has plenty of power available-NOW. It should secure that potential power for the public good, to be developed when necessity arises. Every publicly-owned power site is insurance against high rates in the years to come.

The Labor Party's Problem

It is an ironical turn of circumstance that makes labor difficulties the one great problem that may eventually wreck the labor government of England. With 500,000 cotton mill employes on strike in England, the government is presented with a problem of the first magnitude. Since unemployment is one of England's great ills, this strike presents a difficulty more extreme than might otherwise be the case. The Conservative government weathered the general strike three years ago, but the labor government's position is more thorny. The future of a Labor cabinet to handle labor problems satisfactorily would provide the party's opponents with a campaign argument too powerful to be borne. Upon the solution of this cotton strike the fate of MacDonald's government may rest. —Portland Daily News.

Pendleton Rodeo Best Ever

Pendleton, Ore., Aug. 21, 29 Looming big in the fall rodeo calendar is the Pendleton Round-Up, September 18, 19, 20 and 21. Always a stellar event of world-wide importance, this year it assumes still greater proportions.

For this is the twentieth anniversary and the greatness of the Western pageant is living testimony to the success of this community enterprise which was first sponsored by local people 20 years ago and which has never lacked their wholehearted support. Recently a $20,000 bond issue was voted for the improvement of the Round-Up park, grandstands, bleachers, etc. Fitting, indeed, it is that on this anniversary on Wednesday, the first day of the Round-Up, a statue to the late Tilman D. Taylor, sheriff of Umatilla county and second president of the Round-Up, who in 1909 lost his life at the hands of outlaws. Cast in bronze, the heroic statue is the work of A. Scientific Method Need in Government

Perils to Democracy Pointed Out by Noted Statesman in Address to Graduates of University of Oregon

This article is the fourth of a series of six which will be published in this paper. The address on "Scientific Method and Social Progress" of which this article is a part, was delivered by Gen. Harbord before the graduating class of the University of Oregon on the annual commencement this year.

By FRANK O. LOWDEN, Former Governor of Illinois

As we are told by the advertisers themselves, a new psychology among the people. Not only does this great spending feverishly equalize the cheapest objects of use from the list of luxuries to that of necessities. While the per capita income of our people has increased in recent years, that increase has not kept pace, so far as we can judge, with the new wants created by mass buying.

Another by-product of the machine age—the world is rapidly becoming industrialized. Governments are more and more interesting themselves in finding foreign outlets for exportable goods. We are told that nations are facing the severest struggle in history for domination in trade. Under modern conditions it is becoming well recognized fact that the real underlying cause of war are economic in their nature. With the enormous production for which this machine age is responsible, how shall we contrive to prevent this increasing rivalry for markets from growing into a clash of arms.

With the tremendous emphasis that has been put upon the production of goods, we tend more and more to measure life in material terms. We exult and honor the man who avails himself of all the resources which the scientific has made and built for himself a huge fortune, and we forget even the name of the man whose patient toil has made all this possible. How shall we restore the sense of proportion between the achievements of the foot? How shall we keep our sense of spiritual and moral values from being swept away by this mighty avalanche of material goods?

I have suggested a few, and only a few, of the questions that arise as a result of this machine age which we cannot answer if civilization is to endure. These questions all have to do with human relationships. A heavy burden is thus laid upon the social sciences.

Society, too, has not yet learned how to husband its natural resources. We are told by the economists that all wealth comes primarily from the earth. It furnishes food and shelter and the means of communication. It supplies all the raw materials upon which our marvelous industrial system is based. When we contemplate the wasteful methods by which we mine our coal, our vast disappearing reserves of copper and iron, the rapid depletion of our forests, and above all, the diminishing fertility of our soils, we must, I think, challenge the estimate of our national wealth which the census gives. Other nations in the past equally rich themselves as to their growing wealth, to find that it was but ephemeral after all. Vladimir U. Sushkevitch, professor of economic history in Columbia University, tells us of this:

"Go to the ruins of ancient and rich civilizations in Asia Minor, northern Africa or elsewhere. Look at the unproductive valleys, at the dead and buried cities, and you can decipher there the promise and prophecy that the law of soil exhaustion held in store for all of us, last date and day for your appearance is the 29th day of August, 1929, and the service of this summons shall be deemed completed at the expiration of the last date for publication thereof, and unless you make defense on said date and day, plaintiff will take judgment and decree against you as prayed for in her complaint on file herein."

Today it is agreed on every hand that our farm population is in distress. And all economists are of a single mind that unprofitable agriculture means rapid soil deterioration.

The progress and security of a nation depend largely upon the kind of people who live in it. The citizen may be more splendid and brilliant. They are more likely to attract the notice of visitors from foreign lands. They may have a more conspicuous place in the histories which men write. He, however, who would measure the goodness of a nation and predict its future will go out into the open country to learn what manner of man he there will find. A city may have a more splendid and brilliant prospect of homes by constant cropping, land could be better reserved for labor and support life; so the people abandoned it. Deserted, it became a desert; the light soil was washed by the rain and blown away by shifting winds."

AMERICA'S RADIO LEAD IN DANGER

Gen. J. G. Harbord Sees a Threat to Our Nation's Place in British Merger

The recent successful effort of the British to bring about consolidation of their cable and radio interests is a serious challenge to the radio supremacy of the United States, and of more importance to our country than oil or morphia during this moment, according to General J. G. Harbord, who was chief of staff of the U. S. Army and now is President of the Radio Corporation of America.

"Great Britain being the great cable-controlling power of our planet," General Harbord explained, "the combination thereof of cables and radio into one system is a direct threat to our position as a world power."

The effect of this advanced system of international communication is a subject of discussion in the chambers of the world. General Harbord says, and is not viewed with indifference by any great nation existing in the world, unless it be the United States. "Communications play an important part in national defense," he continues. "This is especially true of radio, and with countries having distant possessions such as the Philippines, Alaska and Hawaii or Australia, Canada, South Africa and India."

Great Britain approached this problem with the seriousness its importance demanded, in the opinion of General Harbord, and on March 15 of last year, as a result, the principal communication rivals in Great Britain, the Eastern Telegraph Company, Limited, representing cables, and the Marconi company, radio, announced a merger in the form of a holding company. The government will have representation on the board of directors, which with the vote of either the cable or radio interest, will be controlling. The press approved this merger.

"This new combined British communications interest will affect American radio interests in every part of the world," General Harbord asserts. "There will hardly be a port or principal city on the planet which will not be reached by British communications. American trade in every quarter of the globe cannot but be profoundly affected. The national defense of the United States must reckon with the planetary domination of communications by the British. Such is the result of the action of the farsighted British race under the lash which American progress in radio has applied. A wise old people which centuries ago understood the dangers of national adolescence through which we still are passing. Her politicians abuse one another, so do our own, but against the outside world Britain's policy changes little with the advent of one party or another on the political stage."

Hard to Understand "The time when Great Britain, France, Italy and Germany are uniting radio and cables seems to be the time taken by our country to keep them apart. What others unite to secure leadership in communications we divide. The long deliberations which preceded the consummation of the cable-radio merger in Great Britain are in our country the enactment of the White Act of 1927, which in plain terms forbids any purchase of radio by cables or vice versa. While this provision is understood to have been inserted under the minority leadership in the last days of the drafting of the law, its purpose no doubt was to preserve the competition, in form at least, between the two methods of international communication—radio and cables.

"Clashing between the blind legs of the British lion with the tail of that noble beast wrapped around his neck is a poor people for the American cable from which to recover lost leadership in world communications."

Mr. John Garner left for several months visit in Idaho with his son. Miss Emma Schifferer has left for Twin Rocks where she will stay for about a week. Mrs. F. H. Fliflet, Palma and Oscar Fliflet of Salem, Mr. and Mrs.

RADIO ENTHUSIASTS WELCOME NEW TUBES

Radio amateurs have shown a quick response to the new rugged rectifier Radiotron with a low and constant voltage drop which just has been put on the market by the Radio Corporation of America. The new tube, Radiotron UX-305, is of the hot-cathode, mercury vapor type, and the makers assert it is establishing a new standard of performance for the amateur transmitter operating with a rectified plate supply.

A four electrode, screen grid tube, with new features.

It is ample in current capacity and, in half or full wave circuit connections, is especially suited for supplying the transmitter with stable rectified plate voltage—key up or key down. It operates at relatively low temperature, and no starting mechanism is required.

Two other interesting new tubes which just have been introduced by the Radio Corporation are Radiotron UX-245 and Radiotron UY-224. Radiotron UX-245 is a power amplifier tube for supplying large undistorted output to the loud speaker. It is capable of delivering a power output equal to that of the UX-110, but at a plate voltage not exceeding 300 volts. The tube can be used only with apparatus especially designed for it and is intended for use in the last audio amplifying stage of power line operated sets which supply not more than 25 volts to the last audio socket, as well as proper grid and plate voltages. The filament is of the coiled filament type, which assures great strength and high efficiency.

FELLOWSHIPS FOR RADIO LAW WORK

A striking illustration of the rapid growth in the radio field is seen in the recent announcement by the Radio Corporation of America of three fellowships of $1,500 each at Columbia University Law School to provide for an additional year of study of the intricacies of Federal laws, especially those pertaining to radio problems. The board of trustees at the university has approved and the fellows will be chosen soon to start work next Fall. The awards are offered for one year only as an experiment.
