This is the fourth article in the series now appearing exclusively in The Tribune prior to their publication in book form. Comments are invited. In answer to several inquiries—a limited number of previous issues of The Tribune, containing the preceding articles, are still available.—The Editor.

As the present installment in this series is being written the Yuletide spirit is abroad in the land. Young and old, alike, seem to be animated by it. Christmas greetings, expressing the sender's heartfelt wish for the health and happiness of the recipient, are flying back and forth throughout the length and breadth of our country. Someone has called them "sunshine distributors." They are. Sprightly messengers of kindly thoughts, they carry cheer into remote places, and gladness to the hearts of shut-ins and lonely.

Meanwhile the entire populace surrendered to one of the fangs of all human attributes—the impulse to "give." Everywhere bundles and packages are being made up, wrapped and addressed to someone, somewhere. What is in these packages? Why, some gift which the sender, after much deliberation, has decided will give the receiver the greatest pleasure.

Where are they all going? They are going into the "homes" of the nation and into these homes that have, for the time being at least, again become homes in accord with tradition and the Christmas spirit, "Christmas in the old home." Is there anyone, over the age of forty, say, who cannot look back and visualize the picture of a real home Christmas? And could he or she possibly refrain from harboring an earnest hope that it would continue on thus forever? What are the most hallowed of all our memories? Are they not those of our childhood days? When the words, "Merry Christmas" were the most wonderful words were known?

An editorial in a morning paper contains this pregnant thought: "Christmas is never quite the same as it was celebrated in the old home of childhood." This is unquestionably true, and applies to the home of today as well as to those of a past generation. If it be "old-fashioned" to love home and home surroundings, then in God's name, let us be old-fashioned.

ISAAC LEE PATTERSON

In the passing of Isaac Lee Patterson, Oregon loses not only a chief executive, but a devoted, proudly loyal son. Born in the year of Oregon's admission to statehood, Governor Patterson's seventy years of life kept pace with the state's development and his interests were always intimately joined with those of the Commonwealth that gave birth to him.

On the qualities of his mind and character, Isaac Patterson expressed the staunch virtues that were the flower of the pioneer spirit: strength, serenity and untiring patience. In his office as governor he counted no detail trivial or insignificant, but gave to every duty as it came the same quiet, intent attention that waited the more momentous affairs of government.

In all the erect height of his towering, snow-crowned figure, Mr. Patterson was every inch the governor, but with the smile on his kindly face and the warmth of his ready handclasp he was generously the friend of everyone he met. His dignity was the natural attitude of an upright soul, not the assumed robe of office, just as his equanimity was the sincere evidence of his good heart.

So it is today, all over the state which Governor Patterson pointed it a high privilege to serve, there is grief for a loved and honored friend.—Portland Telegram

Those taking part in the program were dressed in the Oriental costumes. There were treats for all the children. The attendance of the members of the Christian church was much appreciated.

The pulpit will be filled next Sunday by Rev. M. A. Groves, of West Salem, a former pastor of the Turner church, whom all will be glad to hear again.

Our regular pastor, Rev. W. S. Burgoyne, will be back from his vacation and be with us again Sunday, January 5.

METHODIST CHURCH

Governor Patterson Died Sat. Night.

Born in 1859 in Log Cabin in Benton County

The death of Isaac L. Patterson, governor of Oregon, occurred at 8:10 o'clock, Saturday night at his farm home at Eola, seven miles west of Salem in Polk county. Death resulted from a weakened condition of the heart brought on by pneumonia.

The news of the death of Governor Patterson cast a pall of sorrow over the entire state. The governor was reported to be improved but Friday his heart, which was weakened by the fever, began to grow weaker until the end came.

Isaac Lee Patterson was the son of pioneer parents, his father F. A. Patterson, to Oregon from Belleville, Illinois and his mother who was Caroline Tatam, came from Missouri. He was born in a log cabin in Benton county, in 1859, the same year that Oregon became a state.

Huge Still Found On The Baker Ranch

An explosion set fire to an old disused cow barn on the E. C. Baker ranch, two miles west of Stayton, last Thursday morning. The smoke was seen by Henry Smith, constable of the Stayton district, who were reported to be hunting for Christmas trees. As the barn burned away a huge still was disclosed, said to be 300 gallon capacity. Deputy sheriff Barber arrived on the scene and the still and about 30 gallons of alleged moonshine liquor was taken to Stayton where it was on exhibition at the Hunt and Tate garage. Following the fire the operator made his escape and only the woman and children were on the place at the time. They were reported to have been taken into custody.

The fire disclosed ten large vats capable of holding more than 1000 gallons of mash each. Apparently material was on the ground for manufacturing more of the vats and also kegs to hold the finished product. The value of the plant was estimated by some to be $5000. Corn, barley and wheat was used for the mash, and some sacks of grain were reported to be on the ground that had not yet been opened. The plant had not been in operation long as the renter, B. Schatz, supposed to have been the operator had only lived on the place since the first of October.

The offall of the still was piped across the field into a huge cesspool near the creek while the water was piped from the creek through an underground pipe. It was said by the officers to be the largest plant ever found in Marion county.
