Agricultural conditions in the Willamette valley and in fact the whole state of Oregon were given some good publicity in the Mountain States Power company's page advertisement which appeared recently in the Oregon Voter magazine. The ad which was entitled "Oregon Farmers Earn 20% More Than the U. S. Average" contained some interesting facts and figures and is quoted here-with as follows:

"The United States department of agriculture figures show that the Oregon farmers earn 20% more than the national average and the per capita earnings of the Oregon farmers are over 50% above the national average. It is a significant fact that the Pacific coast has far more electrical development on farms than any other section of the United States. This means that Oregon farmers together with their neighbors of Washington and California are conducting their farm operations on a modern and efficient business-like basis.

"In the Willamette valley will be found many electrical farms served by this company—successful farms which yield their owners a substantial return on their investment. Oregon may well be proud of her progressive farmers and orchardists who are building a nation-wide reputation for the excellence of Oregon products.

"This company is indeed proud of the part it is taking in increasing profits for our rural customers and in greatly improving working and living conditions on the farm through supplying adequate electric service at reasonable rates.

"Mountain States Power company."
