In all these discussions of disarmament, why has not one thought to call the attention of the League of Nations to the fact that the only ones who really enjoy the nasty unsavory pastime of war, are the old men of the world from whose shriveled souls all love of fellow men has been crowded out by avarice, personal ambition and petty jealousy-old chieftains who sit at home beating tomtoms and urging younger men to go out and fly at one another's throats.

During the last debacle, the most violent agitators for bloodshed both at home and abroad were men safely over the draft limit. They stood on street corners and effervesced stentoriously regarding patriotism, while hurling seathing invectives at any younger man who did not throw down his work and wade joyously into the fray. They made three-minute speeches by the yard, hired bands to work up general enthusiasm, denounced all conscientious objectors as traitors. headed Liberty Loan drives or became dollar-a-year men as a safety measure against having their bluff

If ever approached upon the subect of why they too did not join the cause they were espousing so loudly, they carefully explained that the chief sorrow of their lives was the fact that they were two years over the draft age or had such bad tonsils that there was no use in applying because they would be turned down anyway! Every community can remember them even yet.

What the world needs is more young blood in its business affairs, with executive positions filled by youngsters whose breadth of vision and optimistic faith in the good intentions of their fellow men have not yet been clouded by faulty digestion, cirrhosis of the liver or gout. Were such men in charge of the world's affairs, there would be fewer wars.

Lacking that curative, the next best emergency brake for the chariot of Mars would be an age limit whereby no man under forty-five would be allowed in any army. Did such a custom prevail, there would be no more bloodshed on battlefield if the regulation of hostilities were left in the hands where it now rests.

It is difficult for old men to get along in peace and amity, whether they be ditch diggers or diplomats. Testy flare-ups are one of the privileges of senility, but human destinies should not be left in such hands.

Were the League of Nations to pass a youth limit to enlistment in fighting armies, the booming of cannon would cease for all time. Such a measure will never be passed, however, for the simple reason that those who clutch the strings of power which alone could pass and put it into effect are the very ones who prefer the role of tom-tom beaters themselves.
