Recalling, from a wealth of memories gleaned over a period of eighty years, while Oregon was changing from a wilderness to a commonwealth, he told of the early day school, taught in a 12x14 log cabin, comparing educational advantages of today. He also told of old Fort Hoskins and the placing of the Indian on reservations; how the pioneer eat boiled wheat when they could not get flour. On Sunday they went miles to church, driving an ox team hitched to a lumber wagon, luxuries then but called hardships now. Mr. Pearson is hale and hearty and still conducts his farm south of Turner.
