The Corn Cob Goes To Town

As far as most of us are concerned, there are few waste products from the farm have been considered more useless than corn cobs. They would do in a pinch for kindling if they were dry enough, but beyond that, they have never had any monetary value at all; have been hauled out to trash piles and burned, or maybe dumped into muddy places in the roads in order to get rid of them.

Smiling with tolerant amusement, we have watched the fervent efforts of scientists for years, as they have struggled vainly to find some great and crying need for what represented such a large portion of the farmer's crop after it was hauled in from the field and shucked. By the latest reports from scientific headquarters, it seems as though the scientists in question are on the road to success for already a trail has been broken from the corn cob pile to the manufacturing world, and it is predicted that during the next few years, this will increase to unprecedented lengths.

When tin plate is being manufactured, for instance, one step requires the use of great quantities of bran to soak up the layers of oil with which they are coated. It has been recently discovered that corn cobs ground into flour, serve better for this purpose, besides being much cheaper.

In the making of concrete floors, sawdust is spread over the surface to prevent a too rapid drying. This is expensive because only clean white sawdust can be used, the darker kinds leaving ugly stains. With the advent of corn cob flour, this is no longer a factor to be considered.

Corn cobs coated with iron rust are used in the gas industry. In the electrical world, a hard rubbery substance known as maizolith and serving as a high grade insulating material, is made from corn cobs. In some forms this is much like artificial rubber and with special treatment, makes fair automobile tires. A strong and very cheap glue is now being manufactured from corn cobs, as well as a sugar known as xylose. This has no food value but it is in demand for diabetic patients.

Artificial silk or rayon, acetic acid, wood alcohol, oxalic acid, tar, and the cork substance in linoleum, are other products made from the lowly corn cob. Even the doll industry is invaded, the hard rubbery material of which unbreakable dolls are made, being quite as satisfactory when compounded from corn cob flour as from the highly expensive imported wood fiber used heretofore.

With twenty million tons of corn cobs available each year, all that is needed to put the industry on a sound paying basis, is the erection of factories and adequate education of the public.

The time is not far distant when corn cob products will play a leading role in our industrial life, is the prediction of the Iowa State College which has been performing much of the experimental work.

One's imagination has to stretch considerably to envision dresses, underwear, stockings, sugar, dolls, linoleum, electrical fixtures and glue being made from ordinary old corn cobs. To say nothing of automobile tires and telephone receivers.

As far as the general public is concerned, the coming of the corn cob into its own will be vastly satisfying because the products thus manufactured will be cheaper. And as for the corn farmer—perhaps the traffic in cobs may help to bring the industry out of the doldrums in which it has been sunk these last several years.
