Investigate Cod Liver Oil for Laying Fowls

The summary of experiments in England with cod liver oil for laying hens, says:

(1) Fowls not confined or in open-fronted houses do not require cod liver oil to prevent adult rickets.

(2) Fowls confined behind ordinary glass require some adequate source of vitamine D.

(3) The cod liver oil mixed to the extent of 2 per cent of the grain feed supplied the vitamine D requirements of the fowls under experiment.

(4) One per cent of medical cod liver oil in the scratch feed may not be sufficient to meet the requirements of layers confined behind window glass. The source of oil used may be a factor.

(5) It is not possible to state if cod liver oil is beneficial to fowls not confined or in open-fronted pens getting a normal ration that includes green food.

Healthy Chick Program Brings Higher Returns

Health sticks to clean chicks! By following four simple points in brooding poultrymen can save 90 per cent of their chicks. Not only more chicks will be saved but they will be more profitable birds to keep as layers and breeders. Grow them clean, and health and vigor will go with them through life.

The four points in the Kansas "healthy chick" program call for clean houses, clean ground, and clean feed.

By following these four simple rules egg production has been increased 30 eggs per bird in farm flocks. This increase at 25 cents per dozen means an additional return of 60 cents per hen.

Move Brooder Houses

Brooder houses are commonly made movable in order to change their location and keep the chicks on clean ground.

But much of the convenience of a brooder house is lost when it is moved to a point distant from other farm buildings.

The problem of finding clean ground and keeping it free from disease germs is a difficult one under average farm conditions, but it is a sure road to success.
