In Your Ruts

The four-year-old plugged laboriously along behind Dad through snow almost too deep for his short legs. Turning, his father inquired, "How you coming, fella?" And the answer came back cheerfully confident, "All right. I'm coming along in your ruts." And the short legs strained valiantly to reach the footprints made by the longer grown-up strides.

It is a lesson for every grown-up to ponder. Every day there is some youngster coming along "in your ruts" and it behooves each of us to make those ruts clean-cut and true, headed in the straight clean direction that he wants the youngster to follow. It may be your own short-legged worshipper or it may be the child of a friend who looks up to you as the ideal of all he wishes to be when a man, but there are few adults so unfortunate that they are not imitated and idealized by some child.

Every dad is the model upon which his boy builds. It may be such a poor model that the lad will discard it early in life or the ruts may be such that he may follow them safely through the years. But at least for a time that lad looks up to dad as the greatest man in the world.

Following in the ruts made by dad may not always be a good thing for the boy, but in the words of a tolerant and philosophical sage of the present, "It is a great thing for dad." No one can tell just how often that short-legged lad follow along keeps dad's ruts straight and clean: headed in the direction he wants his son at least, to travel.

Speeches at public dinners in Japan are made before the dinner. This enables the fellow on the program to go home and tell them what he had to eat.

Keeping everlasting at it wins success, so some day somebody will predict the end of the world and hit it.

"No excuse for not being beautiful," an authority says. None, perhaps, but the girl's lack of skill in making up.

There are 25,000,000 automobiles in the United States and a pedestrian rises to ask, "Is that all?"

Another fairly hopeless task is undertaking to convince a foreign visitor that the American dollar buys only half as much as it once did.

SOME MOTHER'S CHILD

At home or away, in alley or street
Wherever I chance, in this wide world
to meet,
A girl that is thoughtless, or a boy
that is wild,
My heart echoes softly, it is some mother's child.

And when I see those o'er whom long years have rolled,
Who's hearts have grown hardened, who's spirits are cold;
Be it woman all fallen or man all de-
fled,
A voice whispers sadly, it is some mother's child.

No matter how far from right she hath strayed,
No matter what inroad dishonor hath made;
No matter what elements cankered
the pearl,
Though tarnished and sullied, she is some mother's girl.

No matter how deep he is sunken in sin,
No matter how much he is shunned
by his kin;
No matter how low is his standard of joy, Though guilty and loathsome, he is some mother's boy.

That head hath been pillowed on tenderest breast,
That form hath been wept o'er, those lips have been pressed;
That soul hath been prayer for, in tones sweet and mild.
For her sake deal gently with some mother's child.

A scientist discovers that the slowest thinkers live longest. That's the kind of a proposition that cannot be proved at a busy intersection.
