The Fairy And The Waif

The story of this Gustave Frohman production is sure to appeal to every person in the audience. The principal actors, Mary Miles Minter (known the country over as "The Littlest Rebel"), Percy Helton (the boy of "Peter Grimm" fame), and Will Archie (whom everyone knows), will delight the children with their pathos and humor, while the grownups will be gripped by the splendid acting and the interest of the plot, based upon events brought about by the sudden outbreak of the present European war, which in brief is as follows:

Major Drayton of the British army receives a cablegram which necessitates his return to London. As he will be gone but a few weeks, his lawyer suggests that he leave Viola in his care.

Viola is not happy in Lawyer Nevinson's household, and is therefore dismayed when at the outbreak of the war abroad, her father writes that he has been ordered to the front. The news of Major Drayton's death causes the Nevinsons' attitude to change. A sum of money entrusted to Nevinson for Viola's care has been lost by him in speculation, and Viola is looked upon as a burden and treated harshly, becoming the household drudge.

Goaded beyond endurance, she turns away, drifts into a theater and becomes a fairy in a Christmas production. At the dress rehearsals she falls from a cloud which was bearing her skyward. She is not injured, but is so berated by the stage manager, that she rushes out into the night in her fairy costume, and disappears. This is how it comes to pass that the waif, a wretched little urchin whose only shelter is an old barrel in a lonely alley, is sure that "the Christmas Angel" has come down to him when he is aroused from his Christmas eve sleep by Viola dashing headlong into his barrel, seeking to hide from a pursuing dog.

Despite the gathering clouds, the threads of the story are woven together into a happy ending. Saturday, April 10th, Dreamland.

SMALL FARMER'S TRADING.

He is Under Serious Handicap Compared With His Bigger Competitor. (Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

A matter which threatens the prosperity and even the existence of the small farmer is the handicap under which he finds himself in buying and selling. The big farmer who can buy and sell in large quantities and also employ expert talent in buying and selling and in securing credit has an advantage over the small farmer who must buy and sell in small quantities and give his time and attention mainly to the growing of crops rather than to selling them.

Much of the supposed economy of large scale production, even in merchandising and manufacturing, is found upon examination to consist wholly in an advantage in bargaining—that is, buying and selling. When it comes to the work of growing farm crops, as distinct from selling them and buying raw materials, the one family farm is the most efficient unit that has yet been found.

But the big farmer can best the individual small farmer in buying and selling. It would seem desirable, from the standpoint of national efficiency, to preserve the small farm as the productive unit, but to organize a number of small farms into larger units for buying and selling. Thus we should have the most efficient units both in producing and in buying and selling.
