To co-operate with other farm bureaus in other counties in this and other states in finding markets and taking advantage of their bargains. To co-operate in the control of such contagious diseases as hog cholera. which have been demonstrated to be largely controllable by co-operative effort.

To teach and bring about the teach ing of subjects to farm boys and girls in schools and clubs, which will be of value to farm men and women. In the doing of all these things to broaden our minds and add to the fullness and interest of country life.

Portable Farrowing Pen. The illustration herewith shows how a portable farrowing pen can easily and cheaply be made. The runners are 2 by 6 and any length desired. Any sound planking will do for the body of the pen. A small window in the rear end is always advisable, as light is necessary. The pen can easily be removed from one part of the farm to another, and it will be found to be one of the most useful things used in swine breeding.

Hay Feeding. A German experiment station has been feeding hay which has been stored for from one to three years to find if its digestibility has been influenced by storage. The conclusion arrived at was that hay was just as digestible after storing as before storing, and that the chief loss was a mechanical loss due to dropping of the leaves. Experiments were made both with meadow hay and clover hay that had been stored in the loft.

A Way to Kill Rate. A contributor to the Farm and Fireside gives the following method for killing rats: Boll concentrated lye in a small amount of water till it forms a thick paste. Then take a bacon rind, tack to a wide board, and around the bacon rind spread the lye. Place the board so rats can easily find it. In atthe lye on their feet. The lye will sting them, and they will lick it off and die from its effects.
