OPENING A BEEHIVE.

Have the smoker ready to give forth a good volume of smoke.

Use the smoker to scare the bees rather than to punish them.

Be careful not to drop any implements with which you are working; take hold of all things firmly.

Move steadily and not nervously.

Do not run if frightened, for the bees understand what running away means as well as you do.

If the bees attack you move slowly away, smoking them off as you go.

If a bee annoys you by her threatening attitude for some time kill her ruthlessly.

If stung by a bee rub off the sting instead of pulling it out with the nails of the thumb and forefinger and thus forcing more venom into the wound.

RAISE THINGS.

While we believe in raising more tons or bushels of our tried staple crops on fewer acres, the conspicuous merits of some newer ones entitle them to a share of our attention. The soy bean is one of these. It may take the place of oats in a rotation where the climate is too warm for oats to prosper. It is a good hay crop almost anywhere in this country.

If raised for the beans they sell at good prices or make a high protein feed. The soy bean is a good catch crop for hay. It improves the land and makes a fine seed bed for wheat. Let us learn to raise it when and where it is needed to readjust a rotation or to supply hay with which to balance the corn crop.—National Stockman and Farmer.

THE WIREWORM PEST.

Birds Are Probably the Best Destroyers of This Farmer's Enemy.

The wireworm is regarded as one of the five chief pests of Indian corn and one of the twelve of wheat and oats. Where wireworms exist even in very small numbers corn will make a poor stand, and where the insects are numerous it is quite customary to sow three or four times the normal amount of seed as a protection against its ravages. Although wireworms do most of this damage while mere grubs measuring from half an inch to three inches in length, they are more readily recognized as adult beetles, which in some localities are known as "click beetles," "skip jacks," "snapping beetles," etc.

A number of birds are known to feed on wireworms and these are probably the most important factor in keeping down the pest. Among these birds are the bobwhite, flicker, mourning dove, ruffed grouse, crow, whippoorwill, California quail, cowbird and bobolink. Cuckoos, woodpeckers, blackbirds, orioles, sparrows, jays and certain kinds of hawks are also useful in this way.

Where the wireworms are too numerous to be effectively checked by birds the only remedies which have been found effective are cultural methods. Attempts to kill the adult beetle by poisoning, drying the seed to prevent its being eaten by the insect, or the introduction of poisonous substances into the soil have all been found decidedly unsatisfactory.

The wheat wireworm is a grass feeder by nature, living on the roots of sod. It produces no appreciable disturbance in meadows, but when the sod is broken the worms concentrate in the drill rows or hills of corn, the usual crop to follow sod in the eastern United States. There they destroy the seed and eat off the roots of such plants as may germinate, frequently producing an absolute crop failure. When land is intended for corn the following year therefore the department's specialists recommend that the sod should be broken immediately after the hay is cut, usually early in July. For the rest of that summer it should be cultivated deeply. Badly infested corn land should be deeply cultivated even at the risk of "root pruning" the corn. If wheat is to follow the corn the field should be very thoroughly cultivated as soon as the corn is removed and before the wheat is sown.

A thorough preparation of the corn seed bed and a liberal use of barnyard manure or other fertilizer will often result in a fair stand of corn despite the wireworms, for a vigorous plant may be able to produce roots enough to withstand the attack of this enemy.
