MAKING A NEW WALNUT.

Demand For These Nuts is Growing Faster Than the Supply.

The demand for walnuts is growing much faster than the supply, writes J. C. Cooper in the Country Gentleman. We do not produce in America more than 20 per cent of what we consume, and it will take fifty to a hundred years, with all the encouragement of the nut experts, to raise enough walnuts to supply the home demand.

For this reason efforts should be made to improve the common black walnut. Nearly all the walnuts cross fertilize readily. The pollen of the Franquette, Mayette, Meylan, Wilson and many other valuable varieties may readily be introduced artificially into the pistillate of the black walnut and in many cases a nut more valuable than the black walnut will result.

Even if there is no noticeable improvement in nuts that have been artificially fertilized, the products of the trees grown from the fertilized nuts may show improvement. The nuts grown on such trees will in many cases be greatly changed in form and quality. Those on one tree may have the distinct flavor of the black walnut; those grown on other trees may have the taste of the common English walnut. But somewhere some one is eventually going to produce a nut that is superior to either parent, and this is the variety that America wants.

A little study of the methods here shown will enable any one to change the form and taste of any walnut. The walnut tree has both male and female blooms. The male bloom, staminate or catkin, comes out at the end of last year's wood; the female bloom, pistillate or nut bloom, comes out at the end of the new growth each spring. The pistillate or nut bloom produces the walnut when properly fertilized by the pollen of the catkin.

The pollen of the catkin is a sticky and fetid impalpable yellow powder and may be borne some distance on the wind. It is carried by the breeze or by insects and sometimes fertilizes nut blooms on trees that have no catkins more than a mile away.

It is best to find a young black walnut tree just coming into bearing and far removed from all other walnut trees. Carefully remove all catkins before they mature or release any pollen.

It is best to remove them before the buds begin to swell in the spring. Then when the pistils are open touch the flowers with a camel's hair brush dipped in the pollen that has been secured for the experiment. This should be done two or three times on different days while the nut bloom is out to make sure that it has been touched at the proper time.

If no isolated small tree is available it will be necessary to protect the experimental pistilla from nearby catkins. This can be done by removing the catkins from the branch that is to carry the experiment and covering the blooms with light paper sacks, which should be left on until all nearby catkins are gone.

This should be done before the catkins mature and before the nut blooms are out. When the nut blooms are sufficiently open to be fertilized the paper sacks should be gently removed, or openings should be made so the pollen may be put on the inclosed bloom.

When the nuts are ripe and are ready to fall they should be gathered and placed where they will get neither too dry nor too warm. In fall or early winter they should be put in a box of sand and left out in the weather until spring. Then plant in good soil, placing them about two inches below the surface.

When the little trees are a year old they may be grafted into black walnuts or other walnut bearing trees, and in two or three years from the grafting you will have nuts from your experiment and will know whether you have a prize or not. The portions of the little trees that are left to grow should begin to bear a crop of nuts in from five to eight years.

A CALL FOR ACTION

The Social Evil and the suffering resulting therefrom are subjects of much serious thought and earnest consideration on the part of many of our best citizens.

You are cordially invited to a conference of leading men of Ontario called by the undersigned to consider this problem, which, in one or another aspect, touches the life of every home.

The Oregon Social Hygiene Society, recognized as one of the strongest in the country, is now ready to co-operate with us in starting an active and steady campaign of education in our community. There will be a place in the plan for every man in the community, who is legitimately and earnestly interested in the protection of our girls and boys.

It is a call for sane and constructive action. Mayor Trow will preside. A comprehensive program has been prepared and the field will be well covered by a member of the Executive Committee of the Oregon Social Hygiene Society from Pendleton, and local speakers.
