CORN SHOW IN WALLA WALLA

Oregon-Washington Railroad & Navigation Co. Issues Premium List.

In the premium list just issued by the Oregon-Washington Railway and Navigation company for its annual corn show to be held Nov. 22 to 25 at Walla Walla, Wn., prizes are offered in six divisions, each of which is subdivided into many classes. Besides cash prizes amounting to a large sum, many valuable pieces of machinery are some of the incentives to display. The John Deere company of Portland and the International Harvester company of America are among the big prize givers. The prize-winning exhibits become the property of the company for exhibition and seed purposes following the show.

This company, which is working hard for the development of western farming lands, is most progressive in its treatment of farmers and prospective settlers. Everything within the power of the officials of the road in reliable information and active incentive to crop improvement, is undertaken and much money spent in the publication of land and crop facts for aiding the farmer.

ONTARIO GIRL HAS NARROW ESCAPE

Miss Dorothy Jaquish had a very narrow escape from drowning a few days ago. She was at Lake Pondoreille and went in bathing, taking a dive from a float. The high altitude and cold water were too much for her, she got some water in her lungs and was about gone when a lady jumped in with her clothing on and dragged her out. There was a nurse there and a doctor was hurriedly called, a pulmometer was used and all the schemes known to science and she was finally straightened out. Dorothy felt that she was about gone, but kept saying to herself that she must not give up. Dorothy was considered quite a good swimmer here last summer, but when she dove down much deeper than she had been accustomed to, she probably got a little rattled and the other girls with her were all rattled so they could not help her, finally Dorothy's cries for help reached a young lady and she jumped in and saved her.

MUCH LAND OPEN FOR SETTLEMENT

Vale, July 15.—Surveyed land open to settlement and within the jurisdiction of the United States land office at Vale, is divided among the following counties: Baker 288,715 acres; Grant, 15,419 acres; Harney 415,430 acres; Malheur, 3,954,949 acres. There are 949,634 acres of land still unsurveyed in Malheur county. The local land office classes the land as dry farming and high grazing. It is expected that when the 640-acre stock homestead provision passes the senate, great activity in selection of much of the higher land will follow.

KERNEL OF CORN CAUSES BOY'S DEATH

A kernel of corn which had slipped down his windpipe and lodged in his lungs caused the death of James Walker, the 14-year-old son of Thomas Walker, early last week.

While planting corn about six weeks ago young Walker had his mouth full of seed corn and one of the kernels slipped down his windpipe,—"went down the wrong way,"—as the children say, and entered the lung. An operation was necessary for the removal of the grain. An abscess formed after the corn was removed and the boy's death followed the second operation performed to clear up the abscess.

DEBATE IN HOUSE STIRS REPUBLICANS

Washington, July 20.—The debate in the house of representatives recently over the administration's revenue bill covers much of the field of discussion during the present campaign. The democrats offered a measure for the imposition of numerous direct taxes upon the American people and the republicans combated it upon the principle that the best source of federal revenue is the tax upon the importation of foreign goods—which tax must be paid by the foreigner and thus affords protection to the American producer. The revenue measure puts before the country the fundamental difference between the republican and democratic parties, and therefore, it emphasizes the importance of revenue policies as live issues in politics. By insisting upon the imposition of direct rather than indirect taxes, the democrats have forced the tariff as a political issue.

At the outset of the debate, Congressman Bennet, of New York, made a telling point against the methods of the democratic party when he criticized the adoption of a rule which prevented the effective offering of amendments by republicans. Adoption of the rule meant that the controlling influences in the democratic party would dictate the details of the measure, even though a minority of the democrats and the republicans really believed some other provisions might be wiser. Since the democratic majority in congress is dominated by the membership from the solid south, it was evident that the south proposed to pass a tax law under which the north would pay the great bulk of the taxes. This sectional discrimination incident to democratic methods was not commented upon by Mr. Bennet, who contented himself with calling attention to the fact that adoption of the rule is in direct violation of the reforms which the progressives have been demanding and the effect must be to preclude the progressive from voting the democratic ticket.

Representative Campbell, of Kansas, who led the opening debate on the merits of the bill, declared that although there have been some increases in appropriations due to preparedness, those increases do not justify the enormous tax burdens which the democrats propose to impose upon the American people. Considering his argument into a few words, he said: "There has never been a time of peace in the history of our country that we have not produced sufficient revenue to pay all our expenses, when the government imposed import duties high enough to protect the industries of the country. On the other hand, there has never been a time when our customs duties have been so low as to give freedom of trade, in which the revenues have not been insufficient to defray the expenses of the government." Mr. Campbell gave statistics to prove his assertion and quoted Jefferson and Jackson in support of protective tariffs, which were good democratic policies until the party, under the leadership of Calhoun, became an exponent of free trade.

One of the humorous, and, from a democratic standpoint, unfortunate features of the debate was a reference to the inauguration of the use of horsemeat for human food during the hard times that followed the enactment of the Underwood law. Representative Quin, democrat, of Mississippi, undertook to defend the use of horsemeat and said, "Is not horsemeat good meat?" To this Representative Hill, of Connecticut, replied: "I am not willing to vote for a policy that will compel American citizens to eat horsemeat. I would give every workingman a porterhouse steak if I had my way. The gentleman from Mississippi can offer horsemeat to the workmen of his state if he wants to."

SHEEPMAN SAYS RANGE IS FINE

A Venator, the successful and prosperous stockman of this county, who has a fine ranch on the south fork of the Malheur river, was in Burns last week. In conversation with the News man Mr. Venator stated that he had purchased the Grant Thompson sheep and had secured sufficient range for successfully carrying the bands. He also reports the range in excellent condition since the recent heavy rains and warm weather.—Burns News.
