boy called Ted. He was a bright youth, strong and full of fun. His father and mother were very brave people. They did not like some of the ceremonies of the English church. They wanted to purify it and were called Puritans. They suffered much persecution for their religion, but the climax came when Ted's father was sentenced to be hung for his belief. It was a dark time, indeed, for Ted and his mother. The night before Ted's father was to be hung, five men came to the door and called for Ted. They were going to rescue his father. Ted asked his mother if he might go with the men. His mother gave him an affirmative answer, and Ted and the men went away. They crept quietly to the window of his father's cell, put soap on the bars of the window, and then filed the bars in two. In about thirty minutes they had two bars filed off and Ted's father crept out. How happy Ted was. Some more people joined them and they fled to Holland. Here they were made welcome but they did not like the Dutch customs. After living here about ten years, they decided to go to America, and make a settlement. They set sail in two vessels. When they got about half way across the ocean, one of the vessels began to leak. They decided to transfer the passengers to the other ships, called the Mayflower. Ted and his father claimed the honor of being the last to leave the sinking ship.

After about two months more of sailing they landed at Plymouth. At the place they landed, there was a rock, afterwards called Plymouth Rock.

They landed in the fall, and when winter came, they did not have enough good, warm houses, and were short of food. That winter they suffered terribly from sickness, lack of food and exposure to the weather. Over one half of the people died and to make matters worse, the Indians bothered them.

When spring came, however, the Indians showed them how to plant corn and other crops also to cultivate them. In the fall after the crops had been harvested, the colony set aside a day in which the people should have a great feast and offer thanks to God for protecting them. They invited the friendly Indians to the feast. Ted had many things to be thankful for. One of the things was that his mother, father and himself were alive and in good health. "Now Bobby and Betty," said their mother, "Go and play and think of all the things you can be thankful for, this year, and some day I will tell you more about the Pilgrims."

SCHOOL BOY TELLS OF THE ORIGIN OF THANKSGIVING

The following was judged the best of the Thanksgiving essays written by a member of the Seventh Grade. The Argus is going to present other stories by the children who are uniting their study of language and current events by reading and studying newspapers.

"THANKSGIVING."

By Wesley McCombs, Seventh Grade

There are three days in the year for children, named Christmas, the Fourth of July and Thanksgiving, as a day when they have all they can eat and then some. They have cakes, pie cookies, doughnuts, candy, nuts, puddings, cranberry sauce, and turkey. It makes my mouth water to think of all the good things most children have to eat on Thanksgiving.

That is what Betty and Robert thought. Betty and Bobby (for every one called Robert, "Bobby") had heard so much about meatless and wheatless days that their heads began to swim every time those days were mentioned, although I have an idea it hurt their stomachs more than it did their heads.

One day Betty got to thinking, what if Thanksgiving should come on meatless or wheatless day. Betty told Bobby, who was in his turn troubled. "Let's go ask mamma," said Bobby. It was a happy suggestion.

They went in and piled their question. Their mother told them that they had nothing to fear and that if they would sit down she would tell them a story. The children, of course, were willing and their mother started to tell the story. A long time ago there was a little
