Here's a Pleasant Saving that Involves no Self-Denial

Thrifty, according to the old idea, meant self-denial. But these are happier days, with happier ways, and the modern housewife is discovering that self-sacrifice is not always essential to economy. There's the family wash, for instance. In Grandmother's day, it was thrifty to do it at home, with all the fuss and bother of wash day. But our family laundry service is convincing modern home-makers that there's truer thrift in sending their family bundles to us, to be washed and ironed in our scientific, clothes conserving way.

For things washed our modern-laundryway, last longer, the cost is no greater, and the wife and mother has ever so much more time for the more important duties of the home.

Proof is waiting you here, this week—just phone for our driver, and you'll find the experiment a satisfying, gratifying surprise.
