SAVE MONEY BY PROPER STORAGE OF POTATO CROP

Thousands of Dollars Lost Each Year in Oregon Because of Lack of Adequate

Oregon Agricultural College, Corvallis, Aug. 16.—Thousands of dollars are lost each year in Oregon because of careless or improper methods of storing potatoes. It is well to plan early for a suitable storeroom for the potato crop.

Use of a cellar is suggested. It should be made in a dry or well drained place and should be built underground. The walls should be brick, concrete, or stone. The ceiling should be plastered if a building is above it, to make a dead air-space between the plaster and the floor. Apertures through which to empty the potatoes should be left at intervals in the sides of the wall. It is well to have a driveway through the center with the bins on each side.

Ventilation and temperature are the most important considerations in building a storeroom. Thirty-five to 40 degrees is a good temperature. If possible air should be lead through a deep underground drain-tile into the cellar. Its length should be sufficient to warm the air a little in winter. The outside end of the tile should be covered to prevent the entrance of vermin. A ventilator on the roof will remove warm air.

A raised board floor should be in each bin with a ventilator running from it up through the tubers at intervals. Have double doors at the entrance and the shoots. The room should be kept dark. A reliable thermometer should always hang in the cellar. If the temperature gets too low use an ordinary oil stove. It is folly to have potatoes freeze to save a gallon of kerosene.
