INCOMPATIBILITY

By HELEN WAITE MUNRO.

(© 1921, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

Love was dead, dead!

Not even a hint of the memory of love remained in the cold gray eyes of the woman descending the steps from the office of the big lawyer, nor in the absent brown ones of her husband as he glanced hastily at his watch with a view to the quickest possible return to business. Something in his tired face, however, drew out in her a trace of the divine maternal that exists in every woman, but especially in those who have a tiny grave to remember, as Dorrice Ordway had.

"You must have something to eat before you go back to work, Robert," she told him quickly. "There is a little restaurant just across the tracks there. It looks clean. We will go over."

Indifferently he ordered the wholesome food she suggested for him. For herself she took only tea and toast—indigestion had lately added itself to her long list of ailments.

He spoke abruptly, between mouthfuls.

"I suppose Black thought it was queer for us to go together to find out the steps necessary for our divorce. Strange, I've faced every kind of business situation alone, but when it comes to telling some one else your family troubles—" he hesitated almost boyishly.

The maternal light again softened her eyes, then died to a cold gleam.

"It will soon be over," she told him. "Mr. Black can fix it up, you see, without trouble—a simple case of incompatibility. You will be free for your everlasting business—business."

"And you for your sanatoriums and baths and eternal complaining," he retorted as he shoved his chair back sharply and led the way out.

"We ought to have brought the car here with us. You know it makes my side ache to walk," she complained, fretfully, as they started back across the tracks.

His only answer was a gruff "Humph" as he walked slightly ahead. Then a horrified gasp from her caused him to turn quickly. She had stooped and was pulling frantically at the heel of her high shoe, which was caught in the track. Struggling, twisting, wrenching, she worked, her terrified eyes watching with awful fascination an object bearing down upon them, looming large like some ancient monster—the engine of the through express.

In seconds that seemed like hours he exerted every last atom of his strength to release her, his mind working lightning quick to find the cause of her captivity. The high heel simply fitted the railed groove in which it had slipped. No power on earth could free her in the scant time before that death-dealing monster would be upon them. No knife, even if he had one, could sever quickly enough the lacings of the high boot! No strength could pull the heel from the strongly made sole. The train was slackening its speed now. The engineer had seen them—was trying frantically to stop, but still the monster came, came.

The divinely maternal look again transfigured her face.

"Jump!" she told him. "Get away!" and she tried to push him from her.

He grasped the hands that sought to send him to safety. Her expression changed to one of perfect trust and love—of the girlish appeal that he remembered so well in the days of their courtship.

"Robert!" she cried, regardless of the oncoming engine. Her eyes were the eyes of the girl of long ago.

He gathered her closely in his arms. Jump for safety and leave her? Never! Dorrice! His wife! The girl of his love! The mother of the child who had left them! What was business! What was all the world! What was life itself, beside a love like this!

The monster was close upon them now in spite of the swift work of the horrified men aboard. An instant more and all was over. Silence! Even the noise of the train died away as it came to a full stop.

But love, after all, was not dead.

First Traveler on Famous Road.

The first white man of whom we have record traversing the route of what is now the National road was Christopher Gist, who had been living near the North Carolina state line and who came into Maryland at the request of the Ohio company to explore the land toward the west. He arrived at Will's creek in October, 1749. Will's creek is a good-sized stream flowing into the Potomac at what is now Cumberland. The Indians knew it as Calcuttuce, a name both difficult to spell and pronounce, which led perhaps to its early discardance. Upon this stream in a small cove in a great mountain which rises there lived a friendly and influential Indian whom the early traders called Will, probably the nearest English stager they could make at this Indian name. So the stream Calcuttuce became Will's creek and the mountain at Cumberland Will's mountain and upon the highest point the body of the Indian, Will, was interred at his death.—Cumberland Evening Times.

"How do you explain your latest theory?"
"My dear sir, I am too eminent a scientist to be expected to spend my time answering questionnaires."

THE ONTARIO TRADING CO.

is the newest firm in Ontario, and yet it carries the standing and good will of the firm of A. L. McDowell, which has been in operation in Ontario for over nine years. To the reputation of the old firm for square dealing and reasonable prices is being added new stocks of goods and new aggressive policies by the new company. Because the most of our business is transacted for cash, we can offer goods at a lower margin than if we were bearing the expenses of a large credit business. However in the case of large purchases we are willing to carry customers for a reasonable length of time. Our prices are low, the quality of our stock is high, and courtesy is the prevailing point in our salesmanship.
