The report sets forth the deduction of Hermann Henriel of Kansas City, public utilities expert employed by the association. HAY GROWERS CONSIDER MARKETING PROBLEMS

Continued from page one) the most economical and satisfactory method of control. In ordinary seasons one spray has been found effective, but in seasons like 1921 climatic conditions are such as to cause two waves of the alfalfa weevil larva to come on and two sprayings are necessary. He stated that the best argument for spraying was the fact that alfalfa growers in sections where the weevil has been a long standing problem, all other methods of control are being rapidly superseded by spraying. For instance, one county in Utah which sprayed 400 acres in 1919 sprayed 4000 in 1920, and 35000 acres in 1921. Regarding the parasite he said that there was hopes of control by this means, but that it could not be relied on and at the best would not take care of the situation for some years to come.

W. H. Doolittle, Secretary of the Ontario Commercial Club presented a plan which is under consideration for the financing of dairying thru the organization of a loan association. He stated that the business men and the Farm Bureau were anxious to increase the dairy business in this section to provide a home market for feeds, and asked the cooperation of the hay growers in bringing this about. At the conclusion of the meeting a motion was passed instructing the chairman to appoint a hay growers committee of three to cooperate with the farm bureau and the business men of the county in working out some solution for the marketing of the surplus hay.

JUDGE WILL R. KING HAS CURE FOR NATIONAL UNREST

Washington Lawyer, Former Oregon Jurist and Once Resident of Ontario Tells Story With Philosophical Point

From a copy of the Philadelphia Inquirer which reached the Argus office through the agency of Postmaster J. R. Gregg, was secured a cure for national unrest, as outlined by Judge Will R. King, formerly of Ontario. Said the Inquirer:

"Freedom from worry is perhaps a born quality with some, but it can be cultivated, and will go far toward curing the national unrest, which, as was repeatedly stressed at the unemployment conference, is largely psychological.

It was at a side discussion of the conference, apart from its formal proceedings, that this quality was analyzed. A story was told of Judge Will R. King, formerly of the Supreme Court of Oregon, later chief counsel of the United States Reclamation Service during the Wilson administration and now a practicing attorney here.

King was riding eastward from Oregon with a friend on the sleeping car. The conversation took a somewhat gruesome turn, albeit tempered by philosophical reflection. It was commented on that, while all of the white races were prone to self-destruction under extreme stress, the negro never committed suicide.

Various theories in explanation were advanced, including religion, environment and other possibly controlling factors. Finally, they concluded to summon the negro porter of the car.

"Sam," began King, "why is it that white men commit suicide, while those of your race never do?"

The colored servant cogitated gravely for a moment, and then answered:

"I think I gets your point, but it's a hard question, Boss. The two races is alike in their experiences, the difference is in the way it affects 'em. 'Pears like to me, the white man has family troubles, or loses his money or sompun, and he worries and worries and worries, till he goes plumb distracted, and then shoots himself. The negro goes through the same calamities, and he worries and worries and worries, till he can't stand it no longer—and then he rolls over and goes to sleep."

PICKING WRONG COAT GETS ONTARIO BOY IN TROUBLE

When young Mr. Ontario goes to a dance in Payette it will behoove him to be careful in the selection of winter wraps when he leaves the hall. This is the moral of the experience Charles Homan had the other night in the Idaho city. Charlie went to the dance and when he left he reached for his hat, and the coat underneath, but it was not his coat that he grabbed. Instead it was a coat belonging to someone who had brought some of the stuff prohibited by the 18th amendment, as the result when Charlie left the hall the hawk-eyed guardians of the morals of Payette wanted to know all about it, and Charlie could not explain, or at least they would not listen to his explanation and as the result he spent the night in Payette and explained to the Judge who listened to reason. As the result along with a lot of other Ontario boys Charlie has taken a solemn vow to eschew Payette dances, and be careful of stray coats.

TELEGRAM STORY STARTS INQUIRIES FOR LAND HERE

Secretary W. H. Doolittle of Commercial Club Receiving Inquiries Every Day As Result of Publicity—Folks Really Want Land

As the result of the story of, "What Malheur County Needs," written by W. H. Doolittle, secretary of the Commercial Club, at the request of Clark Leiter, northwest editor of the Portland Telegram, Mr. Doolittle is being flooded by inquiries asking for definite information relative to possibilities here for small ranches.

Unlike many of the inquiries which come to the club the writers of those received since the Telegram story of October 25th, have had a genuine ring. The men who are inquiring apparently really desire homes and are frank in telling just how they are situated and what they seek.

Mr. Doolittle is listing all the inquiries and answering them individually so that each one is securing first hand knowledge of this section, and he believes that as the result of the publicity and the follow-up work some of those who have sought information will at least come here to investigate further.
