FARM BUREAU PROGRAM OF LAST YEAR STILL APPLIES

Same Conditions Which Ranchers Faced Year Ago Still in Evidence Now It Time To Act

Had every farmer on the irrigated lands listened to and followed some part at least of the suggestions made last year by the farm bureau committees, it is safe to say that things would be in better shape now, both on and off of the farm for there can be no question now that they were right when a surplus of hay and low prices were predicted and that at least fifty percent of the hay should be replaced with other crops which could be gotten out of the county to market. These recommendations, as given publicity last fall were in part as follows:

1. That the Farm Bureau should recommend a reduction in the area of alfalfa hay of at least 50 percent on the land suited to other crops near transportation in order to maintain the hay and general farm business on a profitable basis.
2. That wheat, corn and clover seed should be recommended as standard cash crops for general use, with potatoes and other crops requiring less acreage used as desired.
3. That the irrigated pasture and increased use of silos would be valuable in encouraging livestock keeping and more profitable feeding, thus increasing home consumption of hay.
4. That the best standard three year crop rotation should be clover, corn, wheat, substituting other row crops in place of part of the corn if desired.
5. That the standard two year rotation should be clover, wheat.
6. To riands unsuited to grain and corn production, sweet clover, pasture and seed production, with silage and alfalfa hay is recommended to enable soil building and home consumption of products."

CIDER MAY BE KEPT SWEET

Sweet cider may be preserved by heating it to 160 degrees F and then sealing it in clean bottles or jugs. After the bottles are sealed place them in water and heat to the same temperature for one half hour, when sterilization will be complete. Experiments made by the horticultural products department show that cider may be kept sweet indefinitely this way.—O. A. C. Exp. Station.

FARM REMINDERS

Dairy cows in milk at this season should be fed liberally and protected from the cold rains. Cows exposed to the weather use considerable amounts of feed for body maintenance that otherwise would go into milk production.—O. A. C. Exp. Station.

QUEEN BEES IN DEMAND

Demand for queen bees promises to exceed the supply next spring. Beekeepers should place their orders now for spring delivery in order to insure getting their requirements. The department of entomology will be glad to furnish names of producers having queens for sale.—O. A. C. Exp. Station.
