It Costs You More to rot buildings than it does to let paint save them

CHECK the costs. Compare the prices of lumber and paint. They will show you how extravagant it is to allow buildings to depreciate for lack of paint.

And buildings do depreciate rapidly unless they are painted when they need to be. Paint saves the lumber. It protects your investment.

To enjoy the biggest saving in painting, use the best paint. It spreads more easily—saves labor cost. It covers more surface per gallon than "cheap" paint.

It serves five or more years longer than "cheap" paint. The best paint is most economical because it is scientific in formula and preparation. We have been making best paints for 73 years.

STORY OF THE FAMOUS OLD OREGON TRAIL

A Narrative of the Wilson Price Hunt Expedition in 1811-12 and the "Great Migration" Into Oregon Country, in 1852-3

By Walter E. Meachen, Pres. of Old Oregon Trail Assoc.

Mr. Meeker reached The Dalles from where the real start was made on March 10, 1806. Here he erected the first stone monument, March 15th. Then he traveled on his slow tiresome way through Oregon, Idaho Wyoming, Nebraska, erecting markers on the way and on to Indianapolis, Indiana, which he reached January 5, 1807. On March 1st he started for Washington, D. C., with his ox team and after a diversity of experience on the way, reached the White House and interviewed Roosevelt, then president of the United States who was greatly interested in the venture and promised his aid in securing Government recognition of the Old Oregon Trail.

Mr. Meeker's big idea of the trip was to mark the route and to create an interest in the building of a National highway across the continent in commemoration of the Old Oregon Trail.

Mr. Meeker found to his astonishment that many of the places prominently identified with the early history of the Oregon Trail knew nothing of it owing to the erosions of time and the influx of new people. Mr. Meeker made a second trip by ox team, starting from The Dalles March 16, 1910, and ending at Puyallup, Wash., August 26, 1912.

The outfit of Ezra Meeker is now a permanent exhibit in the State Historical Building of the state of Washington, the taxidermist's skill making the oxen look as natural as life, leaning against the yoke, and the old prairie schooner looking fit for another trip across the continent. The oxen and the wagon being under a glass case 14 by 18 feet. A word regarding the pioneer women is appropriate at this time. Mr. Meeker recounts that on the west bound trip in 1852 they met nine wagons going back east, all driven by women, the men having died of cholera on the way west. The pioneer women went into the wilderness, sharing the same dangers and undergoing the same privations as the men and, as the population grew it was thru her efforts that churches and school houses were erected and the cause of civilization advanced.

Had it not been for the migration of 1843, it is very doubtful if American control could have continued over the Oregon Country and to the Old Oregon Trail must be given the honor of being the pioneer way over which the future citizens of this great Northwest came and dominated its future.

The pioneers of 1843-57 were necessarily brave and hardy for if they had not been they could not have faced the dangers of the journey or have withstood the rigors of the trip. It was a case of the weak perishing and the strong and brave surviving. There was no such word as "fall" in the vocabulary of these people and through the activities and determination of the progeny of these men and women the Great American Desert has been made to blossom as the rose.

From the "History of the Fur Trade of the Far West", by Hiram Martin Chittenden, we gather the following:

"As a highway of travel the Oregon Trail is the most remarkable known to history. Considering the fact that it originated with the spontaneous use of travelers; that no transits had ever located a foot of it; that no travel established its grade; that no engineer sought out the fords or built any bridges or surveyed the mountain passes; that there was no grading to speak of nor any attempt at metallizing the road, the general good quality of this 2000 miles of highway will seem most extraordinary. But not so when the prairies become dry and parched, the road filled with stifling dust, the stream beds mere dry ravines or carrying only an alkaline water which could not be used; the game all gone to more hospitable sections and the summer sun pouring down its heat with torrid intensity. It was then the Trail became a highway of desolation, strewn with abandoned property, the skeletons of horses, mules and oxen and alas, too often with freshly made graves and headboards that told the pitiful tale of suffering too great to be endured. If the Trail was the scene of romance, adventure, pleasure and excitement, so it was marked in every mile of its course by human misery, tragedy and death."

And so it is through tragedy and death that great things are accomplished, and the Old Oregon trail with its hurrying thousands became the Trail of History, sentiment and tragedy over which an empire was reclaimed and saved for America.

Its name should go down in history song and fable as the greatest thorefare in history and its memory be made imperishable by a grateful people.
