VEGETABLE GROWERS MEETING DRAWS INTERESTED CROWD

Field Day Arranged by Bureau Helps Clear Up Possibilities For Commercial Vegetable Growing From Both Production and Market Standpoint

That vegetable growing is receiving attention from many ranchers at present was evident from the attendance at the field day held last Monday at the Lattig farm on Oregon Slope. Fifty-four persons assembled from the various sections of the country and spent the afternoon going over the numerous demonstrations of vegetable crops and varieties being grown there as part of the farm bureau program of work, and in listening to explanations of methods of production and market demands and requirements.

The crops which attracted most attention were head lettuce and fall cauliflower. Of the eleven acres of head lettuce, practically all of which is a splendid stand, that which was planted on July 20 was largely going to seed. There may be some good plants, perhaps enough to partly pay production costs, but it is certain that there will be no profit in this early seeding. The loss was attributed to having the crop too far advanced before the cool weather begins, and the cause of it being too far advanced was thought to be due first to too early planting and second to the extra fertile condition of the soil which promoted a very rapid growth as compared to land last year which had grown a previous crop, for instance. The season is also commonly believed to be hotter for the time of year than average. The later plantings, of which there is by far the greatest acreage, appeared to be coming on satisfactorily and promise to return very high yields of fine quality which should return good profits. So far as the fall lettuce crop goes, it seems well on the way toward becoming a part of the farm production of this section. The possibilities with spring lettuce are, however rather doubtful and will not be definitely determined without further experiment, the chances however being against any considerable acreage ever being devoted to the crop owing to difficulty in getting it headed up before the hot weather begins.

Speaking on the commercial possibilities of other vegetable crops, Mr. Whitacre who is field man for the California Vegetable Union, stated that fall cauliflower for shipment during October may be alright if not grown on too large an acreage. He pronounced that grown on the Lattig farm as excellent and gave a demonstration of when to harvest it and how to prepare the heads for shipment. Some of this is now ready for harvest and as far as the production end goes, showed that it can be grown without question. The best results were had by drilling the seed in the ground and thinning the plants to the proper distance, this being earlier and larger than the transplanted patches. It appeared that the seed should be drilled about the first of July to bring the harvest commencing October first.

Although there were many fine demonstrations showing that big yields of other vegetables can be grown, such as cabbage, tomatoes, beets, carrots, etc., owing to competition from other sections, many of which are nearer the large markets the discussion brought out the fact that difficulty would probably be encountered in marketing if such were grown on a large scale for shipment in car lots, and that therefore their production should be expanded beyond local requirements until it is demonstrated that this section can successfully compete in the large markets. Onions, although exceedingly varied in price, might prove profitable where large yields can be obtained and storage facilities are available when figured on the basis of average prices over a term of years.

A small field of certified seed potatoes attracted considerable attention. A hill dug at random showed an estimated yield of nine pounds of extra good looking seed. Lattig & Johnston will probably harvest two carloads from their 1 1/2 acre patch. This will furnish them with all they need for next year's planting at a cost for production and storage of about 25 per cent of the ordinary cost of seed potatoes, besides possibly having a few hundred dollars worth for sale. This is one of a large number of potato seed plots being grown this year through the farm bureau potato improvement project to demonstrate how to grow seed potatoes at home and thus cut the cost of potato seed down to where it will be possible to have high yielding stuff at a cost which will enable a grower to make a profit under average market conditions.

GIRLS CLUB HAS LONG DEBATE ON SUBJECT OF PROPER MOTTO

After a long debate wherein all the rules of polemics were stressed and many telling arguments the members of the Girls club last Monday night adopted a motto. This serious question found the young women divided into two camps; one wanted this sentiment embodied in the phrase; "Catch the First One," while another group wanted Platonic friendship to prevail and fought for this sentiment: "Be a Friend to All," none of the girls sprung that old timer, "I'll be a Sister to You." As above recited the debate was keen and the Platonists won out, so this is the official logan of the girls: "Be a Friend to All." The young women also devoted time to seriously outlining a program of activity wherein they seek to develop a full rounded sphere of activity; one evening being given to serious study, one to amusement and another to health giving walks. The first of the last named events will be held next Tuesday when the girls meet at the home of Mrs. W. L. Turner at 5:30 p. m. to start on the first hike. The members are asked to bring a cup and spoon—the kind you eat with.

ENROLLMENT AT UNIVERSITY SHOWS LARGE INCREASE

University of Oregon, September. 1/4 With the opening of the fall term of the University of Oregon a week away, executive officers and faculty are completing preparations for registration of new and old students. Credentials of 940 students who are entering the University for the first time have been received and approved. At this time a year ago, 870 students had presented their credentials for approval.
To enter the University of Oregon a student must have as a minimum, fifteen acceptable High school units ten of which must be in English, mathematics, foreign languages, science and history. The remaining five are elective. This entrance requirement is strictly enforced.
Every Freshman is required to be in Eugene next Saturday in order that he or she may take the usual examination in English. The result of the examination does not affect a student's admission to the University, but will determine whether the freshman is to take certain work in English this fall. The examination will be held in Villard Hall on the campus.
Registration days are next Monday and Tuesday. All University work begins Wednesday, October 4. Thursday, October 5, is the last day in the term for filing undergraduate cards. Credentials of entering students should already be in the hands of the registrar. Special arrangements have been made, however, to receive credentials this week, but the student may have to suffer some penalty in the way of delay because of filing entrance requirements later than two weeks in advance of registration.
Oregon students with advanced standing who will enter the University for the first time next week number nine-three, according to Registrar Carlton E. Spencer.
In the 1921-1922 college year, 2,241 students were enrolled during the year at Eugene. One hundred and fifty-four were students in the School of Medicine at Portland; 1,284 took extension courses in Portland; 1,320 availed themselves of work in the correspondence study departments; 110 were specials in the School of Music, and 860 enrolled in the Summer schools at Eugene and Portland. The total enrollment was 5,969 in all departments of the University.
