POWER SITE IS SNATCHED BY NEW CONCERN

Idaho -- Oregon Company Said to Have Lost Oxbow on Snake River in Baker County for Alleged Failure to Heed the Law, so Idaho Company Steps in

The Idaho Consolidated Power & Utilities company, a Delaware corporation, backed by John D. Rockefeller and the Harriman estate, has wrested control of the Oxbow from the Idaho-Oregon Light & Power company in what promises to be one of the greatest power wars ever started in eastern Oregon or the entire western country. The legal coup is securing control of the Oxbow upon which the Idaho Oregon Light & Power company is estimated to have spent $750,000 in preliminary development work which Samuel Untermyer, the noted New York attorney, is connected. The whole matter was arranged under the laws of Oregon, which have recently been changed to conform to the Idaho statutes upon water and power rights, and the rumor is that the Idaho-Oregon concern failed to comply with the new law and thereby lost the Oxbow, which is said to be one of the greatest power sites on the Snake river.

About six years ago the Idaho Oregon Light & Power company started to develop the Oxbow in conjunction with its other properties. When the recent large bond issue was sold in New York the Idaho-Oregon had it provided as one of the conditions of the trust deed which secured the bonds that $2,000,000 would be expended in developing the power site. Work has been done by the local power company but it has been intermittent and for some time nothing has been done toward developing the power site, by those who say that the Idaho-Oregon has lost it to the new concern. Under the Oregon laws it is said there was a provision that work in developing power sites must be continuous and the representatives of the Idaho Consolidated Power & Utilities company claim that the local concern has forfeited its rights to the Oxbow because work was stopped.

Oregon Laws Changed.

A short time ago the laws of Oregon were amended so that anyone who had a water right or a power site must make application to the state engineer of Oregon for a permit to take the necessary water from the streams of the state. The law is said to provide also that companies which had power sites in the course of construction and which had already begun to develop power must apply to the state engineer for a permit to take the waters from the streams of the state. Upon the records at Salem, Ore., it is said, there is no permit issued to the Idaho-Oregon Light & Power company to take waters from the Oregon side of the Snake river for purposes of developing power at the Oxbow. Several attorneys from Boise, Portland and New York have searched the records in the Oregon capital and nothing has been found, in their opinion, which would give the local concern title to the power site or the waters of the Snake river at that point.

Is In State of Oregon.

The power site is wholly within the jurisdiction of Oregon, in Baker county, as the Snake river makes a loop near Homestead. On the east side of the loop the river is many feet higher than on the west side of the loop and a tunnel driven through from one side of the Oxbow to the other would give the water sufficient fall and force to make it one of the great power sites of the world. The amount of electricity which could be generated would irrigate many thousands of acres.

That the Idaho Oregon Light & Power company, with headquarters in Boise, is hardly preparing to abandon its Ox Bow power site, on which an adverse filing has been made and as claimed, given favorable consideration by the state engineer of Oregon, is evidenced by a statement made by O. G. F. Markhus, general manager of the Idaho Oregon, that work was being pushed to complete the Ox Bow plant with the least possible delay and that four turbines, weighing 550,000 pounds and occupying 12 cars were now in transit to the plant. The freight charges on these turbines will be over $10,000.

Mr. Markhus stated relative to the article from the Boise Statesman appearing in the parallel column, that the Idaho-Oregon company had in all respect, complied with the requirements of the statutes of Oregon for the appropriation of water, and fully protected its rights, and proposes continuing its development in the future as it has done in the past. With reference to the statement that work had been abandoned at the Ox Bow, Mr. Markhus said that the work had been continued at all times, and that there was now and had been for some time past, a large force engaged in installing headgates, and that water wheels had been ordered and were now on the way and would be delivered at the power site within two or three weeks and immediately installed.

WHERE ONTARIO GOT ITS $10,000 REVENUE

The Enterprise stated last week that the City of Ontario had levied a municipal tax of 5 mills for the ensuing year, and the statement was and is correct, but the further statement was cited that it was possible to levy such a low tax because of some $10,000 collected in fines in Ontario during 1912 was only partially correct. Mr. Markhus further stated that the company was the absolute owner of the land necessary to make this development, and that no other person or company could develop this project without purchasing both land and works owned in fee by the Idaho-Oregon company.

Rocketeller and Harriman With particular reference to the statement that the so-called Rockefeller and Harriman interests were behind the adverse claimants of these rights, and that there was a power war between those interests and the owners of the Idaho-Oregon properties, he said that he neither knew of any such war nor was he advised that the Rockefeller and Harriman interests were either engaged or proposed to engage in the power business in Idaho or Oregon.

SHAD. JARR. BY RA

Night was last Friday and a large number of "front" for a good other place to go, at of the steel gang, auger laborers and some would flooded the town and n like frontier days for a while. Long into the night; all n, fact; Vale was full of them, and s of them were full. The police di rushing business, and as most of men had money after being paid by the railroad company, the e recorder also did a noticable busin the next day.

About the first place that 50 per of the men from "the front" after striking town is a liquor est, following the lack of warmth and hardship encountered for days and days out in the battle with nature as railroad builders. Not all of them do this, and only a very few actually drink too much; they are pretty decent fellows as a whole, or intend to be, but the sudden transition from nothing to the delights of civilization frequently proves too strong a lure for some of "the boys" as seemed to be the case last weekend.

Fist fights were numerous about town, and more than one blackened eye or face was due to other causes. It was a crowd to conjure with, and the difference was in strong contrast to the time before they came, hungry for a little pleasure, and after they went over to Nyssa, there to work anew for a good time later on.
