ILLUMINATION FOR THE OFFICE AND HOME. Why is the use of glasses so frequent at the present time, as compared with only a few years ago? Perhaps the chief cause is the ignorant or careless adjustment of the light to the reading or working position. This is particularly true of the large modern office, where the chief thought in the arrangement of desks for the clerks and stenographers is economy of floor space. Proper illumination of this work is of secondary importance. Not every desk can be placed by a window, and usually windows will be found only on one side of a room, or at the end, so that ample provision has to be made for artificial lighting. Strong and even illumination is necessary. Desk lamps should be thoroughly screened so that they cannot shine into any body's eyes. They should be so placed that there is no shadow of the hand or pen on the paper when writing. A frosted globe gives a softer light than the ordinary unfrosted globe, and a 16-candle power lamp usually gives sufficient illumination for the ordinary desk work. Too strong a light is just as trying to the eyes as too weak an illumination. A north light is the best, being soft and steady. All desks near windows should be so placed so that the light comes from the left side. The old rule given for reading and writing, that the light should come obliquely over the left shoulder, well illustrates ordinary requirements. In the modern home the incandescent electric lamps hold first place as an illuminant. They should always, however, be furnished with ground bulbs, or better, shaded as to greatly to reduce their otherwise very high intrinsic brilliancy. When the mantle gas burners are used, they should always be shaded, both to reduce the brilliancy and to modify the hue of the light, unless some of the recent mantles, giving an amber tone to the light, are available.

REIGN OF SURPLICE BLOUSE. Many light materials suitable. The surplice blouse is very much in favor, made with kimono sleeves that reach to the wrist, and the neck finished with a broad band, Japanese fashion that crosses at the bust and runs down to the waist, says a New York Times writer. Such a waist is made of soft oriental fabric in white, cream and light shades of tan. They do not have collars that cover the neck, and the Japanese band is merely softened with a narrow frill of lace or a turnover hemstitched band of white chiffon.

No matter how elaborate the gown, a light waist is preferred to one that matches the skirt. This fashion is probably brought about by the fact that the ornate girdles leave little more than a yoke and a pair of sleeves to be supplied by other fabrics. Therefore, it is preferable to use white instead of a dark color, although in evening gowns the reverse is true. Tulle, the color of the skirt, is brought up over the shoulders and arms with a white net lining, and sometimes, in the case of dark velvet evening gowns, there is a broad panel of the velvet brought up the middle of the back to the shoulders, leaving only the sleeves and a part of the front to be made in transparent material.

This fashion is particularly good for the sale of separate blouses of white tulle, of lace and of the thinnest French batiste, hand embroidered and lined with pink chiffon. These last garments are not very well known, but they are distinguished and worn by many women who have skirts with elaborate girdles that reach well up on the figure.

There is also a wash blouse worn with many of the ordinary coat suits which is made of satin figured crepe de chine. The lines are unusually full and the collar is a miniature cape. The neck is V-shaped in front, and outlined with a double frilling of white net.

The majority of one-piece frocks, strange to say, employ the material all the way up to the shoulder, even though it may not be comfortable to the wearer in a warm room. The blouse is cut very loose and hangs away from the figure, and the neck is exposed, so one has more comfort than in the one-piece frocks of other days when a boned lining was necessary.

The simple one-piece gown is probably the best way of solving what to wear in the house. The woman who uses the skirt to a coat and finds that it is worn out in half the time her coat is, has only her short-sightedness to blame. A skirt gets more wear than a jacket at the best, and when one sits about the house in it during the day it quickly loses its smartness.

If a woman feels that it is necessary to wear wash blouses with a separate dark skirt in the house, then let her
