THE PENALTIES OF WAR.

Miss Jane Addams has made discoveries in Europe showing the part imposed on women as the result of the war that is not calculated to inspire confidence in the generally accepted theory that in all cases great wars result in advancement of the world. Commenting on Miss Addams' revelation, the San Francisco Town Talk has this to say:

This is not a time in Europe to be squeamish about the sex relation. The preparation of a race is a matter of more than the merely decorous virtues. And assuredly as a result of this terrible struggle with its prodigious slaughter there will be unprecedented looseness of manners in Europe for many years. The increase of the birth rate will be found to be the paramount desideratum in several nations. It will not be surprising if at least one of the customs of ancient Greece be revived. Already France is looking to the future, and a law has been passed by the chamber of deputies which provides that there shall be no such thing as illegitimacy in the country during the war. The object of this law is not sentimental. The object is to stimulate the propagation of the species. It is notice to all the women of France that it is their patriotic duty to bear children.

According to Jane Addams, who has been gathering data on the subject, the "foundlings" boxes which were confiscated by the government have been put back in the churches, and she asserts that this is deliberate "encouragement of the dissolution of the family ties." Miss Addams wishes to make the point that the war is reviving the tribal conception of patriotism and putting women back many centuries to the times when she had to bear children to increase the power of the tribe.

She says that Germany has gone further than France; that she is making every effort to get hold of the children of her own soldiers, and to that end has sent midwives and nurses in the wake of her armies. As to England, she says that the government has been conniving at the "excesses of English soldiers in the training camps." It is on account of these things that Miss Addams desires to abolish war.

WORDS, MEANING NOTHING.

For the maximum of words and the minimum of information commend us to the title of an act introduced in the New Jersey legislature. It reads as follows: "An act to amend an act which is supplemental to an act to amend an act applying to courts having criminal jurisdiction." The sample is typical of many and New Jersey is not the only offending state. But New Jersey now proposes to make such absurdities unlawful. A measure has been drafted requiring the introducer of a bill to file with it a brief setting forth its purpose, including the name of the law, if any, it is designed to amend. That should help.

Anything that contributes a greater intelligence in lawmaking is welcome. But what is needed more than such contrivances is some method for providing the average legislator with intelligence or compelling him to use honestly what little he has.—E.
