TUMBLING MUSTARD A BAD WEED PEST

(By Howard S. Hammond, Instructor of Botany and Plant Pathology.)

While the mustard family has given us many plants that are useful for food, such as the cabbage, cauliflower, radish, turnip, kale, brussels sprouts, etc., it has also given us many of our worst weeds such as the wild turnip, the charlock, shepherd's purse, hedge mustard, and the tumbling mustard. The last is prohibited by law according to an act of the Oregon legislature of 1907.

This plant was introduced from Europe and has become well established here in the Northwest and is one of the worst weeds with which the farmer has to contend. It is found in the grain fields, and along the roadsides both east and west of the Cascade mountains but is more prevalent in Eastern Oregon. This weed is an erect, smooth, much branched winter annual from one to four feet in height. (The winter annuals differ from the annuals in that the seeds germinate in the fall and produce a rosette of leaves close to the ground. These plantlets live through the winter, send up their flowering stalks next spring, produce seeds and die.)

The young plants form a rosette of soft, pale, downy leaves, which are deeply cut. The leaves of the flowering plants vary greatly. The lower ones have leaf stalks, are deeply incised, and have lance-like lobes, usually covered with hairs giving that part a downy appearance. The leaves on the upper part of the stem are much smaller and have shorter leaf stalks or none at all. The uppermost leaves are long and narrow.

The flowers are borne in a loose head and are of a cream or pale yellow color. They are from one-fourth to one-half an inch in diameter, the petals being arranged in the form of a maltese cross. The flowers begin to open early in June and the plant continues to bloom for six weeks or more. It takes the plant over a month to mature its seed after the flower has opened. The seeds are borne in very slender pods which vary from two to four inches in length. The seeds are of a reddish of a yellowish color, oblong, minutely roughened with mucilaginous glands and when wet this mucilage becomes quite sticky, causing the seeds to stick to each other or to other objects. The seeds will average about one twenty-fifth of an inch in length.

The plant derives its name "Tumbling Mustard" from the fact that in the fall after the seeds have matured it breaks from the ground and is carried long distances by the wind. Each plant produces an enormous number of seeds—a single plant has been known to produce over a million seeds—and since they are not easily shed from the tough dry pods, the plant may be blown long distances over the range or prairie, and scatter their seeds as they roll along.

Tumbling mustard is propagated only by seed, and since it is a winter annual it will give little trouble in cultivated fields. It is more persistent in grain fields, but here it can be effectively held in check by spring harrowing or spraying. All cereals, as wheat, rye, barley and corn may be sprayed with a three per cent solution of copper sulfate to kill the mustard without causing serious injury to the crops. (This is approximately 10 lbs. of copper sulfate to 50 gallons of water.) Spray when the mustard plants are beginning to develop their buds.

If the plants are sprayed while in bloom, increase the strength of the solution. The main points in combating this weed, as with other annuals, are to prevent the seed being Complete Record of Homestead, Desert and Other Entries at the U. S. Land Office at Vale during the past week.

The inclement weather of the past week has prevented the regular number of land applications from appearing at the Land Office, hence there is no report to make in this department this week.

From several outside sources it is remarked that some of the candidates are slow but steady.

Malheur county is complimented for sending sheep thieves to Salem. That's nothing to what will happen there later.

It is waste time for Malheur county to send inmates to state institutions. The are so nearly innocent that they are pardoned out in a few weeks.

IN MEMORIAM

At the regular meeting of the Vale Local Socialist Party of America on January 22nd, 1916, the following resolutions and memorial of our late Comrade Clarence E. Mansur were passed:

"Whereas the silent hand of Death has taken from our midst one of the most devoted and conscientious workers in the great cause of Socialism and universal brotherhood and has stilled forever the voice and hand of our loyal Comrade who had won his way into the hearts of all who knew him; therefore be it resolved that Vale Local of the Socialist Party offer to the departed parents and family of our beloved Comrade their tenderest sympathy in their hour of sorrow.

"And it is further resolved that a copy of these resolutions be printed in the Malheur Enterprise, and that a copy be also sent to the parents of Comrade Mansur, while a third copy be entered upon the party records.

"He was one who saw the dawn while others lived in night. He kept his face toward the 'purpling east' and watched the coming of the blessed day."

EMPIRE CREAM SEPARATOR

A customer said, the other day, "Farmers and Dairy men are getting wise. They are learning how to buy machines. They consider light, easy running the best possible evidence of quality. This is especially true of high speed machines like cream separators. The next thing they consider is, how long the machine has been on the market."

Argument doesn't make quality, does it?

A properly cared for EMPIRE Cream Separator will start under the weight of its crank. You can hold one in your other ear.

EMPIRES have been used by the fathers and grandfathers of many young farmers who are now buying EMPIRES for themselves.
