POINTERS FOR COOKS IN PREPARING FOWLS

Pointers About Preparation of Poultry For Table Use—Cleaning and Cooking.

Cleaning chickens and washing clothes have long been nightmare-like tasks on the housewife's calendar. With that automatic washing machine, Dame Genius has simplified one of these problems, and now the U. S. Department of Agriculture is "over the top" with a scheme which irons the wrinkles out of the problem of preparing fowls for the table. Drawing and cutting up a chicken for cooking or canning is as much an art as the proper interpretation of a Mendelssohn symphony, but study and practice of the following pointers will soon develop the novice into an expert. The operator can remove the entire digestive tract without smearing the meat in any way, and can pack the flesh and bones from the average mature fowl into a quart jar.

wing opening. The head should be left attached to the wing and these organs should be loosened from the neck down as far as the crop.

With a sharp-pointed knife next cut around the shoulder blade, pulling it out of position and breaking it. Locate the white spots on the ribs, and cut along them through the ribs. Also cut the back to and around the vent, and loosen it. Leaving the head attached, loosen the windpipe, gullet and crop, and remove the digestive tract from the bird. Then remove the lungs and kidneys with the point of the knife and cut off the neck close to the body. Cut through the backbone at the joint just above the diaphragm and remove the oil sack. Then separate the breast from the backbone by cutting through to the white spots and breaking.

It is essential to cut in sharply at the point of the breast bone and meat. The fillet should also be cut from each side of the breastbone, while the bones of the breast should be bent in.

How To Can Chicken

In packing the fowl for canning purposes use a quart jar. Pack the saddle with a thigh inside; the breast bone with a thigh inside; the back-fowl no food for 24 hours before killing. The bird should be killed by sticking it through the roof of the mouth.

After the feathers have been removed and the pin feathers drawn, the fowl should be cooled rapidly. When cool, it should be singed and washed carefully with a brush.

Precautions in Butchering. Precautions to observe in butchering the chicken consist in removing the wings after cutting off the tips at the first joint, removing the feet, cutting at the knee joint; removing the legs at the hip or saddle joints and cutting through the connecting joints to separate the thigh from the leg. With a sharp knife sever the neck bone at the head. Care should be taken not to cut the windpipe or gullet. With the index finger separate the windpipe and gullet from the neck and cut through the skin to the bone and ribs with a leg inside, the leg end downward alongside the breastbone; then the wings, the wishbone, the fillets, and the neck bone. Do not pack the giblets with the meat.

Fuller directions for the home canning of chicken, meats, soups, fruits and vegetables may be found in farmers' bulletins of the United States Department of Agriculture, which will be supplied free of charge to anyone requesting them from the Division of Publications.

Keep Things In Use

The best little way to keep off the high cost of living is to make things productive. Every farm, household, office and store has more or less of a collection of articles that are not in use but would be put to work if someone else had them. Why not sell these unused implements, furniture, machines, livestock, crops, supplies, books, tools of whatever they happen to be and get some real money for them that can be used. The other fellow will be glad to get them and put them in use. The best auctioneer we know is Mr. Classified ad. He will cry your sale in 2,000 homes every week for 1 cent a word. List what you have for sale, count the words and send with the proper payment to the Malheur Enterprise and you will get results. Look over the classified ads in this issue for some bargain, inquiry or offer that may prove valuable to you. If it is not there Mr. Classified ad will be willing to try and find it for you if you will only give him a chance.

Traditions Smashed

Of all the traditions broken during the war period, the one which we may be the most certain will never return either in this country or elsewhere, is the old condition of labor. Nor is there any class of people, we venture to say, who wish to see old labor conditions reestablished. Yet with an inconsistency not unusual perhaps, people are waiting for the old prices and cost of labor to come back near old standards.
