LITTLE INTEREST SHOWN
PEOPLE DO NOT WANT TO PAY FOR POLICING MALHEUR COUNTY.

The problem of crime in Malheur County, as evidenced by the number of arrests and convictions, continues to be a major concern for the community.

While there is an increase in the number of people willing to pay for police services, there is still a lack of interest in paying higher taxes to support the local law enforcement agencies.

This lack of support is due to the perception that taxes are not being used effectively and that the police are not doing enough to combat crime in the county.

In response to these concerns, the local government is considering new strategies to increase public interest in paying for police services, such as implementing community policing programs and increasing transparency in the use of tax dollars.

Despite the challenges, the community continues to work towards finding solutions to the problem of crime in Malheur County.
