After using 5 boxes of Dodds Kidney Pills the swelling disappeared and he felt himself again. He says he has been benefited and blessed by the use of Dodds Kidney Pills. "MAY DAY" IN LONDON

ROYAL EXCHANGE, LONDON

TENNYSON could not have wished a more ideal day for the apotheosis of his May queen. It was such a day as poets have sung; "so cool, so calm, so bright." And its very perfection emphasized how the old order has given place to the new.
For the change which has come over the aspect of London within a generation is not merely topographical; manners and customs have been transformed as completely as buildings and streets. And thus it came to pass that my quest after the sights and shows of the May day of 39 years ago ended in failure, writes Henry C. Shelley in the San Francisco Argonaut. Not that I expected to discover milkmaids in procession, dancing merrily before and after that pyramidal garland glittering with silver plate which once gave color and joy to the streets of London; all the milkmaids have become milkmen pushing little hand barrows laden with prosaic cans and adorned with legends about "purity, quality, cleanliness," and the like. Nor was I so foolish as to imagine that the May pole which the Puritans abolished from the Strand would be reared once more as a kind of rival to Nelson's column; such a "remnant of vile heathenism" can no more return to the streets of London than the chief of the Roundheads. But I did expect to meet here and there a stray survival of the glorious Jack-in-the-green of boyhood's days.
Jack-in-the-green's Procession.
What a thrilling spectacle that was! To the juvenile mind of a generation ago, too, it was as mysterious as resplendent. The secret of its construction was darkly hidden, for none save the chimney sweeps who built it knew that it was a mere conical framework of hoops deftly covered with ivy and holly and that its motive power was a man concealed within its leafy recesses. To the uninitiated it was an inexplicable hillock of evergreens, as though nature had created a new type of flora for May day and endowed it with an uncanny animation. And then there were the attendants—grimy faced sweeps bedizened in gilt paper jackets and feather fringed cocked hats, a saturnalia of sooty acolytes abandoned to the revelry of the goddess of flowers. Of course the festival had a utilitarian purpose; one member of the band carried a collecting box inscribed with "the smallest donations thankfully received," but to the children in the crowd who were not expected to contribute Jack-in-the-green's procession was a yearly gift of the gods. And now it has disappeared, never to return.
Only in one squalid London district was any attempt made to celebrate the festival of Flora. At the Browning Settlement in Walworth, which makes a brave effort to brighten life in the name of the poet who was born in the neighborhood, a May queen was crowned and escorted in procession as for several years past, but even that picturesque ceremony suffered from the practical spirit of the twentieth century. That is to say, as the stern educational officials declined to grant a holiday for the occasion, the crowning and procession had to take place at seven o'clock in the morning that the day's school lessons might not suffer.
But the champions of labor admit no allegiance to authority in any form. And so it has come to pass that in modern London it is the exponents of labor who claim May day for leisure! Thus has the festival of Flora been lost to poetry and gained for politics; it is no longer the day of lovers, but the day of laborers; a day for stopping work to talk about work. Such a program commended itself to some five thousand cockneys—men, women and children—who formed up on the Victoria embankment, and with five bands and forty banners, processioned

Ainus of Northern Japan Furnish an Object Lesson to Peoples Who Refuse to Progress.

If one were to go among the Ainus on the island of Hokkaido, in northern Japan, he would find himself in a stage of departure from pure savagery which parallels the condition of our race as it existed 4,000 years ago, and shows in practice how surely the savage is destined to elimination by any other branch of the human species which advances beyond his stage of co-operation, says the Philadelphia North American. The Ainus, commonly believed to be a lost branch of the whites, have been subject to the more progressive Japanese for ages, and their level, without making close distinction, corresponds to that of some aborigines of Australia, who have been attributed, in their origin, to tribes of adventurers from ancient Chaldea.
The Ainus were on their island long before the Japs arrived, and they preserve their original savage customs and superstitions, with a fidelity that is strong evidence of their purity of race and also of the fatal consequences of both customs and superstitions. Yet so strong is the influence of example that they conform in some measure to the more modern life around them. The men pride themselves on being hunters and leave the women to raise the rude crops which eke out their subsistence. But when it is absolutely necessary the men will condescend to take a turn at scratching the surface of the soil. Their worship of the bear is probably the trait which has made them most widely known; but the bears they catch as cubs and rear as deities fare no better, if as well, as the bears we happen to capture in this country. It is the luck of our bears, very often, to end in comfort, if not in freedom, in a circus or a zoo. But the bears of the Ainu, after being humbly apologized to, are mercilessly slaughtered and enjoyably eaten.
The woman who longs for the times when there were cavemen, with a preference for nice white cavemen to suit her refined nature, can take a trip to Japan and observe the hairy Ainu and his ways—and also the ways of his womenfolk. She will doubtless conclude that she has been born about 4,000 years later than any period which could have met with her approval, even if she is living now 4,000 years ahead of the time when she will feel she is perfectly content with man as civilization has improved him.

Our Naval Commanders.

When Ade Was Younger.
As a reporter on the old Record in the days before he became known to fame, George Ade's personal charm as well as his striking appearance and sartorial elegance, made him a great favorite with the ladies. One of his assignments took him to a public dance given on the Northwest side, and here he met a young woman, evidently the belle of the ball, who was a waitress in a downtown restaurant. Ade danced with her a number of times and thought that he had made a great impression. This impression was heightened, he thought, when he revealed his identity. It is not every day that a girl of the masses meets a literary gentleman, an iceman or a butcher's boy being perhaps more in her orbit.
What was Ade's chagrin half an hour later, then, to overhear her talking to her girl chum at the table.
"My best feller," said the chum, "is a bartender."
"Huh! That's nothing," topped the other; "I got a real swell guy. My beau's a porter on the Record."—Chicago Inter Ocean.

His Duty Done.
The much more general participation in athletics at Yale marks a transition from its former days when only specialists were allowed in the rowing tanks or on the football field.
At a Yale dinner President Hadley, the guest of honor, commented favorably on this change, stating that it brought many more boys into the college activities than in the days of Yale supremacy.
"Of course," he said, "I regret the change of fortune in our specialized athletics—but that reminds me of the story of little Johann of Newtown, Conn. Little Johann lived at one end of the town and his grandfather at the other. One day his grandfather died.
"A stranger passing down the street noticed little Johann playing in the garden, quite as if nothing had happened. Rather shocked at the lad's conduct, he stopped and said: 'Johann, your grandfather is dead.'
"The little fellow looked up. 'I know it,' he said, as he resumed his play. 'I've cried.'"

Records of Heavy Rainfalls.
Records of winters in the past bring to light some accounts of excessive rains. For in 1909, a gauge kept at Monumental, in California, registered 153.54 inches. Only at Glenora, Oregon, with a record of 167.29 for a single year, has this rainfall record been exceeded in records for the United States. The heaviest rainfall for a single month ever recorded in the United States was at Helen Mine, California, in January, 1909, when 71.54 inches fell. Campo has the record for the heaviest downpour ever recorded in California for a single day. This was 11½ inches, on August 12, 1891, and all of this fell within 80 minutes. This is far below the American record, however, which is held by Alexandria, Louisiana, with a record of 21.4 inches in a single day.

That Awful Bath.
Charles was too busy playing and did not want to stop for his bath. When mother insisted, he said:
"Oh, dear, I wish you were dead!"
"But if I were, dear," said mamma, "you would get so dirty your little friends wouldn't play with you. They wouldn't come to see you, and when they saw you coming, would run away."
Charles was very thoughtful for a minute, then with a deep sigh, he said: "Live and wash me, then."

REMARKABLE CASE of Mrs. HAM
Declares Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Saved Her Life and Sanity.

Shamrock, Mo.—"I feel it my duty to tell the public the condition of my health before using your medicine. I had falling, inflammation and congestion, female weakness, pains in both sides, backaches and bearing down pains, was short of memory, nervous, impatient, passed sleepless nights, and had neither strength nor energy. There was always a fear and dread in my mind, I had cold, nervous, weak spells, hot flashes over my body. I had a place in my right side that was so sore that I could hardly bear the weight of my clothes. I tried medicines and doctors, but they did me little good, and I never expected to get out again. I got Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and Blood Purifier, and I certainly would have been in grave or in an asylum if your medicines had not saved me. But now I can work all day, sleep well at night, eat anything I want, have no hot flashes or weak, nervous spells. All pains, aches, fears and dreads are gone, my house, children and husband are no longer neglected, as I am almost entirely free of the bad symptoms I had before taking your remedies, and all is pleasure and happiness in my home."—Mrs. JOSIE HAM, R. F. D. 1, Box 22, Shamrock, Missouri.
