The easiest way for a girl to catch a husband is by not trying.

JOHN DREW AT HEILIG THEATRE

One of the most interesting and important announcements of the theatrical season is that of the coming to the Heilig Theatre, Broadway at Taylor, three nights beginning Monday, May 10, with a popular matinee, Wednesday, May 12, of John Drew in the famous revival of his earlier success, "Rosemary," the comedy by Louis N. Parker and Murray Carson in which the distinguished actor appeared some years ago throughout the country. At the time of the original production of "Rosemary" Mr. Drew was seen as Sir Jasper Thornlyke for twenty-two weeks in New York City and for a year and a half on tour later. Few plays can lay claim to such lasting qualities and the praise and acclaim accorded the present revival would seem to prove that it has lost none of its quaint charm nor delightful humor.

Mr. Drew perhaps has never had a role displaying him to better advantage than that of the English country squire who falls desperately in love with an eloping damsel whose flight with her intended husband is interrupted in front of his park gates, when in a pouring rain the elopers' horse bolts, leaving them amid the ruins of their chaise. With a bachelor's sentimental interest in the heart affairs of others the squire aids the lovers, quite blind to the fact that he himself is succumbing to the charms of the bride-to-be. He furthers their plans to marry by hurrying them to London in his own coach, arriving on the day of Queen Victoria's coronation.

An Old Time Advertisement.

In old newspapers the advertisements make interesting reading. Here is one from the London Chronicle of 1785: "Run Away.—Whereas Thomas Williams, Apprentice to John Clark of Queensborough, in the County of Kent, dreggerman, has run away from his said master's service and not been heard of these three years, if the said Thomas Williams will return to his master's service within three months after the date of this advertisement he will be kindly received, and whoever harbours him after this notice will be prosecuted as the law directs."
