PLAGUE OF GRASSHOPPERS.

The Pests Should Be Destroyed Before They Lay Their Eggs.
(Prepared by New York State College of Agriculture.)

Recent examinations by an expert from the State College of Agriculture have indicated that serious outbreaks of grasshoppers may be expected again in those sections where they were abundant last year. This is due, in part, to the fact that although large numbers of the grasshoppers were killed last year by the use of the poison bait, they had had a chance to lay their eggs before efforts were made to destroy them.

At the present time, and until they get to be pretty well grown, the young grasshoppers are confined to the more or less localized areas in which they have hatched from the eggs. It is comparatively easy for any one to locate these breeding places now, and, according to the experts, just as easy to get rid of at least a large proportion of the grasshoppers before they can do serious injury to the crops.

There are several methods of fighting these pests. They can be poisoned, or they can be caught in "hopper dozers" and destroyed. The so called "Kansas bait" is perhaps as satisfactory a poison mixture as has been used.

The formula is as follows: Twenty pounds bran, one pound paris green, two quarts molasses, three oranges or lemons and about three and a half gallons water. Mix the bran and paris green together dry. If very much of the material is to be mixed it is advisable for the person doing the mixing to protect himself from breathing the poisonous dust by trying a moistened sponge or handkerchief over his mouth and nose. Then mix the molasses and water together, squeeze the juice of the fruits into the water and the skin and pulp chopped up fine and moisten the bran with the liquid. Just enough of the liquid should be used to thoroughly moisten the bran, but not to make it sloppy. Then it should be sown broadcast over the infested field, preferably early in the morning, so that the grasshoppers can get a chance to eat it before the heat of the day dries the moisture in the bran. It should be sown evenly and thinly over the field, not in lumps. Although the poison may not kill the grasshoppers for a day or so, it seems to stop their feeding as soon as they eat some of it. The amount of mixture in the foregoing formula is enough for three or four acres. Live stock of all kinds should be kept from the treated fields for a few days to avoid any possible danger of poisoning them. If the grasshoppers are especially numerous it may be necessary to renew the poison bait after four or five days.

Where there is some sort of a spraying machine available, the infested fields may be sprayed with arsenate of lead or paris green. The arsenate of lead is used at the rate of five pounds of the paste to 50 gallons of water. The paris green should be used in the proportion of one and one-half pounds to fifty gallons of water, with a pound or so of good lump lime added to prevent burning of the vegetation. About two quarts of cheap molasses should be added to each fifty gallons of liquid.

Another material which may be used as a spray is arsenate of soda, in which one pound of commercial arsenate of soda is used to two quarts of molasses and fifty gallons of water.
