Farm and Grange Notes

Make Your Wife a Partner.

In these days we frequently see women at the head of prosperous mercantile establishments. Now and then we hear of a woman who is sole owner and proprietor of a good farm, and I have yet to hear of one that is not making a success of it.

It does seem that when women enter these fields of endeavor, that have always been more or less monopolized by men, they succeed. I don't say that all women would succeed in such work, but it looks as if only thrifty women venture out of woman's accustomed sphere. These same women would make a success of managing a home, in fact, some of them do both.

Surely there's no more commendable work for a woman than managing a home, yet some of them get an appetite for a business career, or an independent career, as they call it, and the desire overbalances the home-making instinct.

Others are forced to take up and continue the work of departed husbands and since such a lot may fall to any wife or mother, it is the duty of the husband while alive to make the wife his business partner and confidant. He should acquaint her with the workings of his business affairs, discuss with her the problems that come up regarding the farm work and other questions that pertain to the family income. This not only enables her to take up the work and continue it when it becomes necessary, but you will often find that she can offer valuable suggestions. It also makes her feel that she has an interest in the financial affairs of the home, the bread-winning end, and she is more likely to be fully considerate when economic measures are necessary.

In some cases the business instinct is more keen in the woman than in the man, and I have known instances where it was the woman's intuition that made the farm go right. The mother instinct in women is good when applied to farm stock and crops. They like to be mothered. I mean by this that loving care will tell when applied to the care of stock and crops.

I visited a farm one day and found the man at the barn grinding tools, and the wife in the field driving a riding gang plow. I don't mean to make the wife that kind of a partner. I mean a partner in the headwork—two heads are always better than one. Sometimes the burden of household duties become tiresome and the woman longs for a change. Few women have the strength or capability to divide their energies between home-making and business affairs, and where the home woman ventures into other work for sake of diversion, it is as a rule, at the expense of her family's welfare. Too much time and study cannot be given to the training of boys and girls. By letting your wife share your business planning and management, you will relieve the monotony of household duties, satisfy that hankering for diversion and gain valuable assistance and helpful sympathy in your own work. Make your wife a partner—it pays in more ways than one.—A. W. S.

Farmer Hope of Nation.

We maintain that farming is, and should be, one of the most dignified professions in the world, and that the farmer is the hope of this nation. We believe that the farmer is of more importance than the farm, and should be first improved; that the skillful hand and cultured mind are his greatest assets; that the boys and girls are his most valuable crop. We would kindly among our readers an ambition for more intelligent farming, and would make not only better farms but better homes.

Local Business Broad in Scope.

beautiful buildings on the ground give it the appearance of a wealthy country estate, which indeed it is, an estate shared in by hundreds of lot owners. Trees and ornamental shrubs have been planted carefully and tastefully, and so ideally is this plot situated that the silver thaw last winter passed it by untouched. In a few years these trees will add a stately and grandeur which only nature can impart to an otherwise perfect aspect. It is some little distance from the street car, but the cemetery bus makes regular trips every Wednesday and Sunday afternoon and carries passengers free of charge. It will also meet passengers at any time in response to a phone call. About 40 acres have already been platted, and as we visited this spot this morning we saw men at work with teams ploughing up some more of the virgin hillside. The prices of lots are as reasonable as any in Portland.

The Crematorium is one of the most modern on the whole Pacific coast. It is neatness itself, with its spotted white tiling, its immaculately painted floors, its old-fashioned paneled windows, and its carpeted and cushioned rest rooms. Everything looks so clean, so pure, so open; nothing mysterious, no cavernous farnaces, with belching smokestacks, no sickening or mysterious odors. Everything in plain sight, tasteful, restful, orderly. In the columbarium are hundreds of niches where relatives can deposit the ashes of their departed friends, and there are receptacles provided for floral offerings.

Mr. I. S. Knapp has succeeded Mr. Reynolds as General Manager, and takes a great pride in keeping everything in "apple-pie" order and in showing visitors around. This institution is one of the most valuable assets of the community, or perhaps the shoe is on the other foot—this community shows such a faith in itself and such a solid, permanent future that it attracts businesses of as high a class as can be found anywhere in Portland.

Mushroom Farm.

Yes, of course you're surprised, and so were we, for we didn't suppose there was such an institution for miles. Nevertheless, right close to the car at 95th St. and Woodstock Ave., Niek Falser has 2,400 feet of mushroom beds in a two-story, four-decker hollow brick tile cellar. This is six feet below the ground and six feet above ground; has no windows, only some openings for air which are carefully screened by burlap so that no light will enter. It is heated artificially by a furnace and hot water pipes. Every day Mr. Falser picks his mushrooms and takes them to Portland. He sells all he can and what cannot be disposed of in this way are canned at home. He sells from five to fourteen lbs of mushrooms to the largest Portland hotels such as the Multnomah, Benson, Portland and others, and four or five jars of the canned product are put up at home each day. Mrs. Falser assists him in the latter work and he is just preparing to market his canned goods in commercial quantities. He has been three years in the business and is just getting it nicely established. He finds that a lot of experience is needed to avoid the pitfalls and dangers. Off two beds last month—335 square feet—he sold $125.00 worth of mushrooms. The main difficulties are poor fertilizers, poor spawn and irregular heat. He is contemplating taking in a working partner if he can find the right man.

L. E. Wiley, Grocer.

The only local member of the United Grocers is L. E. Wiley, the enterprising family grocer at 9040 Foster Road, half a block west from the Postoffice. The United Grocers is an incorporated body of some sixty or seventy grocersmen who have joined together for the purpose of securing better rates and greater power in buying. As a result any member of this body is able to buy at the very lowest wholesale rate and is thereby enabled to compete successfully with Meier & Frank and other large houses. As a matter of fact this is demonstrated clearly by Mr. Wiley's prices. He is advertising all 10-cent goods at 9 cents, and all 5-cent goods at 4 cents; also, all 15-cent and two-for-a-quarter goods at 12 cents. He announces he will sell as cheap as any Grabberia on the same terms for the same class of goods. As he owns his building he has no difficulty in meeting any price of any grocery house in Portland or its suburbs. He has been for nine years in his present location, which he has improved from time to time. A few years ago he added a large warehouse which will accommodate three car loads of hay. He pays special attention to the farmer trade, as he is so close to the postoffice on the main county road. He has special loading and unloading facilities for farmers and he carries a $40,000 stock of groceries, hay, grain, feed, lime and cement. He carries the most complete line of chicken feed in the Mt. Scott district and makes a specialty of seeds in season.

F. F. Ehrlich, Tailor.

Four years ago F. F. Ehrlich started a tailor shop in Lents. He is located next to the Post Office, on Foster Road. He assures us that Portland tailors cannot match his prices considering the quality of goods and the styles of garment. He does not attempt to compete with the so-called $15 tailor, for he says no one can tailor a suit at that price; that is manufacturing, and is not one whit better than ready-made clothing. Mr. Ehrlich impressed us as being able to give equally good service with any down-town tailor at a lower figure, two mighty good reasons for trading at home. His service is just as prompt as any, and he is fully prepared to handle repairing, altering, cleaning and pressing at short notice. He gives as one important factor in leading people to trade in Portland the too prevalent tendency to live beyond their means. This finds expression in wanting to deal in stores with fine fixtures, brussels carpets and obsequious clerks. In catering to such tastes many are willing to spend more money than they can really afford to pay.

Yott Building Barber Shop.

E. E. Otto and H. Arnold are the proprietors of the attractive barber shop east of the Coffman & Spring store on Foster Road. This shop is roomy, and clean and presents a very creditable appearance. It has very fine windows, which are kept scrupulously clean, and there are always ferns and flowering plants on display. Mr. Otto has been established in this shop for nearly a year, and Mr. Arnold has recently joined him, having been in the employ of Chester's Barber Shop for some time previously. They have baths in connection, and specialize in modern hair-cutting. They find business is satisfactory.

Walsh has a stock of good gasoline all the time at prices as good as can be found anywhere. If.

FOODLESS, THEY TAKE TUG ACROSS ATLANTIC

Remarkable Feat by Mate, Engineer and Fireman of Vigilant.

London.—One of the most extraordinary voyages ever made across the Atlantic has just been completed by the Vigilant, a little American tug belonging to New York and bound from St. John's, N. F., for Cardiff. Two days out from St. John's the Vigilant experienced terrific weather, and on the fifth day she sent S O S calls, the captain fearing she would founder. The Holland-American liner Ryndam picked up the signals and proceeded to her assistance.

The captain and twelve of the tug's crew were taken off by the Ryndam, which was bound for Rotterdam, but three men refused to leave. They were the second mate, Robert Ferguson, a Scot; the third engineer, Thomas Walsh, an Irishman, and an American, John Smith, a fireman.

Taking control of the tug, these three men overcame tremendous difficulties and actually succeeded in bringing her within sight of the Irish coast, where they were picked up by a British patrol vessel. Ferguson was locked in the wheelhouse and the other two in the engine room. The terrible weather prevented them moving, and they remained at their posts for fifty hours without food, water or sleep. Several parts of the tug were smashed in the gale, including the shaft of the dynamo in the engine room. This caused the tug to be in total darkness by night and added to the horrors of the situation.

The taking off of the crew of the Vigilant by the Ryndam was reported by cable from Rotterdam.

Eyes of a Giraffe.

No matter from what direction you may approach the giraffe, the top heavy looking animal is sure to discover you. It has been called the original "rubber-neck." It is not generally known that nature, because of the height of its eyes from the ground, has supplied it with a talent peculiarly its own for making observations. As a matter of fact, a giraffe can see in all directions at the same time without moving its head. The eyes are large and prominent and so placed at the side of the head that, bulging out as they do, they are capable of seeing backward as well as forward.

Origin of the Word "Farm."

The origin of the word "farm" is as follows: In the Saxons' time the estates which the lords of manors granted to the freemen were at first but for a term of years, with a reversion of a rent, which in those days was of corn and other products. The leases so made were called fermes or farmes, but times ensuing turned the produce into money and terms of years to terms of life and inheritance.—Westminster Gazette.

A Marvel of Chemistry.

One of the most marvelous things is the burning of a jet of hydrogen gas in liquid air. The smoke that arises from the combustion floats off in the air as pure snow, a flame burning brilliantly in the midst of a liquid, with snow given off for smoke!

Unwittingly Kind.

Cholly Ayres—Yes, since the Parkers lost their money I have stopped calling there. Miss Keen—That is very kind of you. It ought to cheer them up a whole lot.—Baltimore Sun.

Good impulses.

A mere good impulse that does not result in good works is rather worse than useless, for if not carried out in deed it has a reaction instead of an action as its outcome.

Happiness at least is not solitary. It joys to communicate; it loves others, for it depends on them for its existence.
