Portland is today in a position Where to stand still means to go Back.

It's industries demand support. It's workers want men in office who can be trusted; who will have at heart their interest as they would their own.

The City's history of the past few months, the awakening of the Shipyards; the extension of its Power as a commercial factor, are but a forerunner of its possibilities.

It needs today a man for Mayor, big enough to grasp the significance, of all this; who will advance the interests of all. To bring about the Most Good for the Greatest Number.
