Angeles, giving a description of how the new system is being regulated in San Francisco. It is operated by the Municipal Street Railway, which is owned by the city. The motor buses are run in connection with the street car system and are run on schedule time. The chauffeurs are all licensed and must give bonds. Each bus has a seating capacity of 18 persons and all the conveniences, such as sanitary straps hang from the ceilings and electrically lighted are part of the comforts. Passengers pay as they enter and the main entrance is operated by a crank at the driver's seat. Electric-lighted route signals on the roof designate the terminal points and electric push buttons are placed opposite each seat. During the first five days three buses were in operation, and they covered 728, 669 and 576 miles respectively.

If the people vote yes to this ordinance—it is marked 100 on the ballot—its advocates claim that it will bring about a service that will be appreciated and will not be a menace to life and destruction of property.
