The Salvation Army of Chicago is changing the old-time saloon into an overseas "hut." Here is the way it works, according to a Chicago newspaper man: The swinging doors the long mirror, and the back bar are still in evidence. But the "free lunch" counter has been changed to a coffee and doughnut stand, while bizarre pictures have yielded to the camouflage's brush: some nymphs have been given garb, beer steins have been turned to flower pots.

Several young women are present. Some meet their sweethearts there—one couple started from the place on their honey-moon. The social centers intended to take the place of saloons when prohibition becomes a reality—are the outgrowth of the overseas "hut." Others are to be opened.

A mother's love is indeed the golden link that binds youth to age; and he is still but a child, however time may have furrowed his cheek, or silvered his brow, who can yet recall, with a softened heart, the fond devotion, or the gentle chidings, of the best friend God ever gave us?—Bovee.
