Not Luck but Foresight

Published figures from England show that English jam manufacturers and canneries last season paid the following prices per ton for berries:

- Red raspberries, $425.
- Black currants, $525.
- Red currants, $250.
- Gooseberries, $230.
- Strawberries, $480.

Some timid people fear that present activity in berry culture in western Oregon and Washington is only temporary.

These persons should study conditions. To begin with the rest of the world cannot raise berries as well as we can and large parts of the world raise none at all.

On the other hand the whole world likes berries in their different preserved and canned forms. A pint or a quart jar, tin or bottle of preserved fruit or fruit juice can be shipped to the ends of the world at a price any family can pay. Thus is the world supplied with a necessary, wholesome and much-sought after food product, the demand for which will grow as consumers find they can get it.

The waiter brought the soft-boiled eggs.

Boiled harder than a crack. "Can't boil 'em softer, Boss," he said; "They're from a Plymouth Rock."

When inclined to cuss this country for your tough luck, sit down and think about moving to Europe.

Jack Rosenau has had a new cement walk put in this week at his property at 9532 59th avenue.

Since Oregon went dry the tailors ask you, when taking your measure for a suit, which you prefer, pint or quart pockets.
